and trellises. It is also a great plant to use in containers and hanging plants around a pool. The tiny flowers come in a variety of colors, including pink, red, salmon-orange, and yellow. Plant in full sun in a slightly acidic soil. It will grow 20 to 40 feet in ideal conditions.

Plumbago (Ceratostigma plumbaginoides). If you're looking for a slower-spreading vine, this is it. The vine-like plant produces blue flowers in early summer and late fall. It is easily grown and tolerates a wide variety of soil types. To optimize growth, provide afternoon shade during the heat of summer.

Black-eyed Susan vine (Thunbergia alata). This annual prefers full sun. Plant in a hanging pot and keep it watered.

Cypress vine (Ipomoea quamoclit). Once considered a weed, the cypress vine is now sold in garden centers. This vine likes full sun and attracts hummingbirds with its red, trumpet-shaped flowers.

Bow tie vine (Dalechampia dioscoreifolia). This vine enjoys full sun and good, moist garden soil. It will produce hot pink to purple blooms until frost.

Crossvine (Bignonia capreolata). This semi-evergreen to evergreen woody vine is at its best in spring, when its bright tubular flowers show off for several weeks. Tangerine Beauty' is a particularly glorious version.

Crossvine can climb a trellis using its tendrils or cling to smooth walls with its small disks. It needs full sun to develop thick foliage and can eventually grow to 50 feet if given proper support. Its eventual height depends in part on its support—anywhere from 15 to 50 feet is usual.
