3. d. For each structure in which a vegetative roof is proposed, state the additional cost of the structure that is attributable to structural features necessary to support the additional weight of a vegetative roof.

Amended Answer: The structural engineer estimated the additional cost for extra structural support associated with the vegetative roof is approximately $15,000. He said the additional load added by the vegetative roof is minimal. The amount of concrete for the beams, columns and pre-cast roof slab would be basically the same, but the concrete would have less reinforcement. We would most likely have the same number of bars, but the bars would be smaller sizes. The labor would basically be the same, so the only cost difference would be material cost. To proceed with incorporating a traditional roof in the project, the estimated engineering fee for re-design and re-submittal of the project for building permit approval would be approximately $55,000. The re-design and re-permitting would take approximately 4 months to complete.

Mr. Hughes:

This message is to advise that Commission Staff expects a final Order in the above-referenced case to be issued on or about August 1, 2011.

As Commission Staff is preparing the order, it would like to clarify a few points regarding the use of vegetative roofs. In Response to Item 3 of Commission Staff's First Information Request, NKWD indicated that no additional studies or analyses had been performed regarding the cost of the structures due to the use of a vegetative roof. If NKWD has performed any studies or analyses regarding this issue or obtained any additional information on this subject, I respectfully request on Commission Staff's behalf that such information be provided. This information may be submitted in response to this message. Commission staff will then assume responsibility for filing the information into the record of the above-referenced case.

If you have any questions, please contact me.

Sincerely,
