Litigation to Prevent/Defend Lawsuits – Todd Osterloh (Law Firm of Sturgill, Turner, Barker & Moloney)

All utilities find themselves in litigation. Water districts, water associations, and municipal utilities are no different. Infrastructure failure, employment, contracts, and territory disputes are just a few issues that frequently arise with water utilities. Often, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Knowing what types of lawsuits may be filed will help utility commissioners and officials implement policies that will prevent issues from arising. Once a lawsuit is filed, there are often certain defenses that are available to certain utilities. Water districts, for example, enjoy governmental immunity from certain types of claims. Knowing when these immunities apply can help the utilities in both the prevention and defense of litigation. This type of topic may be interesting because it presents an opportunity to give examples of actual litigation that has occurred, including what a utility did right and what it could have done better.
