Dear Editor:

The World Monument Fund has designated our central Kentucky counties as one of the top 100 most culturally important and endangered landscapes in the world.

Why can an international organization recognize the importance of our land, yet we don't?

Allowing Kentucky American Water to build its proposed treatment plant at Monterey and pipeline across Franklin, Scott and Fayette Counties will result in an outright destruction of land that is irreplaceable and recognized globally as unique. What a said sight for visitors to the 2010 World Equestrian Games to see.

Water solutions for central Kentucky should strive to utilize conservation measures and existing infrastructure facilities rather than permanently scar our treasured landscape.

Sincerely,

Marcus Wiley
