Republican nomination last Tuesday with victories in Ohio and Texas, but the Democratic primaries there put Clinton back into contention after 11 straight losses to Obama. Their contest, and the attention it commands, could last for months.

McCain, in the meantime, must transition from smaller, state-by-state primary campaigns to a national campaign that in some ways is less suited to his style of campaigning.

The Arizona senator thrives in the smaller settings of primary campaign events where he can make compete with either Obama or Clinton in the general election.

"We can see the great job that our opponents have done in fundraising. We've got a lot of work to do," McCain said.

That seems an understatement considering the staggering amounts raised by the Democrats. Last month alone, Obama raised $55 million, and Clinton $35 million. McCain, in contrast, was on track to raise $12 million, about the same as in January, according to his campaign.

McCain's schedule has been packed with fundrais-

McCain, 41, has said his foremost concern is finding someone capable of serving in his place. He likes to joke that a vice president has only two jobs — to break ties in the Senate, and to inquire daily about the president's health.

He talked with President Bush about choosing a running mate when they had lunch at the White House. As he told reporters later, Bush joked, "You know, you want to be careful who you select to run it." That's because Vice President Dick Cheney headed the running-mate search for Bush, who ultimately chose Cheney.

MISSILES SUIT THE PAKISTAN tribal area, 20 dead

By BASHIRULLAH KHAN and LAUREN FRAYER
Associated Press Writers

MIRAN SHAH, Pakistan Missiles that witnesses say came from an unmanned drone flattened a suspected militant safehouse Sunday in Pakistan's tribal area along the Afghan border. State television said the strike killed about 20 people.

Witnesses said a drone dropped seven missiles on the sprawling, mud-brick compound about three miles outside Wana, the main town in South Waziristan. Only U.S.-led coalition forces in Afghanistan are known to operate unmanned drones in the region, and they have launched attacks over the Pakistani border before.

Osama bin Laden and other senior al-Qaida and Taliban leaders are believed to be hiding out somewhere in the rugged, lawless tribal regions along the Afghan-Pakistan border.

Anger over U.S. attacks on militants in the area, which often have tacit approval from President Pervez Musharraf's regime, helped carry the president's opponents to victory in parliamentary elections last month. The new parliament convenes on Monday.

Many Pakistanis believe Musharraf's friendship with the U.S. and tactics in fighting al-Qaida and Taliban militants have only fueled terrorism at home.

Witnesses, state TV and intelligence officials said the destroyed building belonged to a local militant leader and Taliban sympathizer who goes by the single name Noorullah.

State-run Pakistan Television said about 20 people were killed. It was unclear whether Noorullah was among them.

Rahim Khan, a local tribesman who went to the site, said the huge, fortress-like compound was known as a hub for visiting foreign militants. Eight of those killed were foreigners, two intelligence officials said on condition of anonymity because of the nature of their work. They did not elaborate.

The Pakistani military said there were five or six explosions that caused casualties.

Maj. Chris Belcher, a U.S. military spokesman, said coalition forces conducted an operation Sunday just across the border in Afghanistan's Paktika province. But he said he had no information about the Pakistan strike and doubted the two incidents were related.
