Please reconsider expanding public exposure to mercury. The impact of mercury emissions from coal-burning power plants on increasing the risk of autism are clearly documented: "Proximity to point sources of environmental mercury release as a predictor of autism prevalence" by R. Palmer, S. Blanchard and R. Wood. Certainly the exposure to the second most harmful heavy metal and neurotoxin has a wide range of serious health consequences, especially on our children. It's not a matter of if someone gets damaged from this, it's just a matter of who. Eventually, someone you care about or someone who will sue you will be affected.

Sincerely,
Millie Dove
