affective disorder is light treatment therapy, which involves sitting under a special bulb that emits light intended to mimic the effects of sunlight.

"You may extend your light exposure up to four hours a day," Hyatt said. "It's not very convenient, but it's very effective."

Van Cleave said the light equipment ranges in cost from $200 to $500, but in some cases can be covered by insurance. For patients without insurance, or for those whose insurance will not cover the light equipment, Van Cleave recommends the use of sunlight lamps. Though their intended use is to aid the growth of indoor flowers and plants, sunlight lamps are a cheaper alternative.

"It's a little more cost effective," Van Cleave said. "There's not as much research on it. I have more vent the symptoms of seasonal affective disorder, they can be beneficial for many patients, especially for those who cannot afford light therapy.

Hyatt said he often prescribes his seasonal affective disorder patients antidepressants in September to give the medication plenty of time to work so when symptoms set in at the first of winter, they will be much less severe.

Irwin said she takes an antidepressant and it has been very helpful in treating her depression and migraines.

According to Dr. Susan Howell, psychologist and professor at CU, many sufferers of depression are reluctant to take antidepressants, which can hinder treatment.

"I think a lot of people have an attitude that medication is negative, and I projects.

"We have a great Sunday School class, and so we meet for coffee a lot, and I would also encourage people to mix with friends because if you isolate yourself, it gets worse," Irwin said.

Quilting, baking cookies, making candy and working puzzles are some hobbies she says are good for dren through that keeps her motivated to continue treatment.

Howell said those who think they might be experiencing seasonal affective disorder or other forms of depression shouldn't hesitate to seek treatment. She said it is a good idea to start with a regular doctor who can refer to a psychiatrist or counselor.

January 20-February 18
 Aquarius, if you want to broaden your horizons you will have to explore beyond your comfort zone. It may not always be comfortable, but it can be adventurous.

PISCES
 February 19-March 20
 Pisces, you have many questions, but not enough answers are coming your way. Delve a little deeper this week.

ARIES
 March 21-April 19
 Aries, patience and calm is the way out of a tricky situation. You also may want to keep your opinions to yourself until everything gets settled, which shouldn't take long.

May 21-June 21
 You may need to subscribe to a new way of thinking, Gemini. The way you have been doing things lately is not working out too well. Ask a family member for advice.

CANCER
 June 22-July 22
 Cancer, it can be easy to get into a routine and then in a rut. Try switching up just one thing from your daily tasks, and it could provide a breath of fresh air.

LEO
 July 23-August 22
 Leo, take advantage of the many opportunities for you to meet new people and forge new friendships this week. You may just meet someone who changes your life.

Libra, you will likely find yourself in a domestic groove over the next few days. Use the time to get creative in the kitchen, straighten up the abode and do some decorating.

SCORPIO
 October 23-November 21
 Scorpio, don't allow your emotions to get the best of you during a disagreement this week. Be sure to gather all of the facts before you form an opinion.

SAGITTARIUS
 November 22-December 21
 Sagittarius, this is the perfect week to correct any wrong impressions you might have made. Be overly generous with all the people you meet.
