Corporate Bond Yield Averages

Table with columns for Corporate Bond Yield Averages, categorized by AV. CORP., CORPORATE BY RATINGS (Aaa, Aa, A, Baa), CORPORATE BY GROUPS (P.U., IND., R.R.), PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS (Aaa, Aa, A, Baa), INDUSTRIAL BONDS (Aaa, Aa, A, Baa), and RAILROAD BONDS (Aaa, Aa, A, Baa). Rows represent months from 2001 to 2006.

Notes: Moody's Long-Term Corporate Bond Yield Averages have been published daily since 1929. They are derived from pricing data on a regularly-replenished population of nearly 75 seasoned corporate bonds in the US market, each with current outstandings over $100 million. The bonds have maturities as close as possible to 30 years; they are dropped from the list if their remaining life falls below 20 years, if their ratings change. Bonds with deep discounts or steep premiums to par are generally excluded. All yields are yield-to-maturity calculated on a semi-annual basis. Each observation is an unweighted average, with Average Corporate Yields representing the unweighted average of the corresponding Average Industrial and Average Public Utility observations. Because of the death of Aaa-rated railroad term bond issues, Moody's Aaa railroad bond yield average was discontinued as of December 18, 1967. Moody's Aaa public utility average suspended from Jan. 1984 thru Sept. 1984. Oct. 1984 figure for last 14 business days only. The Railroad Bond Averages were discontinued as of July 17, 1989 because of insufficient frequently tradable bonds. The July figures were based on 8 business days. Because of the death of Aaa rated public utility bond issues, Moody's Aaa public utility bond yield average was discontinued as of December 10, 2001. Note: October 2002 figures have been adjusted. Note: January 2003 figures have been adjusted.

Data from 1926-2011

* Betas are estimated from monthly returns in excess of the 30-day U.S. Treasury bill total return, January 1926-December 2011.

 Historical riskless rate measured by the 65-year arithmetic mean income return component of 20-year government bonds (5.15 percent)

† Calculated in the context of the CAPM by multiplying the equity risk premium by beta. The equity risk premium is estimated by the arithmetic mean total return of the S&P 500 (11.77 percent) minus the arithmetic mean income return component of 20-year government bonds (5.15 percent) from 1926-2011.

Third, the firm size effect is seasonal. For example, small company stocks outperformed large company stocks in the month of January in a large majority of the years. Such predictability is surprising and suspicious in light of modern capital market theory. These three aspects of the firm size effect—long-term returns in excess of systematic risk, serial correlation, and seasonality—will be analyzed thoroughly in the following sections.

Long-Term Returns in Excess of Systematic Risk

The capital asset pricing model (CAPM) does not fully account for the higher returns of small company stocks. Table 7-5 shows the returns in excess of systematic risk over the past 86 years for each decile of the NYSE/AMEX/NASDAQ. Recall that the CAPM is expressed as follows:

$$k_s = r_f + (\beta_s \times ERP)$$

Table 7-5 uses the CAPM to estimate the return in excess of the riskless rate and compares this estimate to historical performance. According to the CAPM, the expected return on a security should consist of the riskless rate plus an additional return to compensate for the systematic risk of the security. The return in excess of the riskless rate is estimated in the context of the CAPM by multiplying the equity risk premium by β (beta). The equity risk premium is the return that compensates investors for taking on risk equal to the risk of the market as a whole (systematic risk).³ Beta measures the extent to which a security or portfolio is exposed to systematic risk.⁴ The beta of each decile indicates the degree to which the decile's return moves with that of the overall market.

A beta greater than one indicates that the security or portfolio has greater systematic risk than the market; according to the CAPM equation, investors are compensated for taking on this additional risk. Yet, Table 7-5 illustrates that the smaller deciles have had returns that are not fully explained by their higher betas. This return in excess of that predicted by CAPM increases as one moves from the largest companies in decile 1 to the smallest in decile 10. The excess return is especially pronounced for micro-cap stocks (deciles 9-10). This size-related phenomenon has prompted a revision to the CAPM, which includes a size premium. Chapter 4 presents this modified CAPM theory and its application in more detail.

Long-Term Government Bonds

The long-term government bond total return index, constructed with an approximate 20-year maturity, closed 2011 at a level of $119.18 (based on year-end 1925 equaling $1.00). Based on the capital appreciation component alone, the $1.00 index closed at $1.39, a 0.4 percent capital gain over the period 1926–2011. This indicates that more than all of the positive historical returns on long-term government bonds were due to income returns. The compound annual total return for long-term government bonds was 5.7 percent.

Intermediate-Term Government Bonds

One dollar invested in intermediate-term bonds at the end of 1925, with coupons reinvested, grew to $92.08 by year-end 2011, compared to $84.12 at year-end 2010. The compound annual total return for intermediate-term government bonds was 5.4 percent. Capital appreciation caused $1.00 to increase to $1.72 over the 86-year period, representing a compound annual growth rate of 0.6 percent.

Treasury Bills

One dollar invested in Treasury bills at the end of 1925 was worth $20.56 by year-end 2011, with a compound annual growth rate of 3.6 percent. Treasury bill returns followed distinct patterns, described on the next page. Moreover, Treasury bills tended to track inflation; therefore, the average annual inflation-adjusted return on Treasury bills (or real riskless rate of return) was only 0.6 percent over the 86-year period. This real return also followed distinct patterns.

Patterns in Treasury Bill Returns

During the late 1920s and early 1930s, Treasury bill returns were just above zero. (These returns were observed during a largely deflationary period.) Beginning in late 1941, the yields on Treasury bills were pegged by the government at low rates while high inflation was experienced.

Treasury bills closely tracked inflation after March 1951, when Treasury bill yields were deregulated in the U.S. Treasury-Federal Reserve Accord. (Treasury bill returns after that date reflect free market rates.) This tracking relationship has weakened since 1973. From about 1974 to 1980, Treasury bill returns were consistently lower than inflation rates. From 1981 to 2008, real returns on Treasury bills have been positive, with the exception of 2002–2005. Real treasury bill returns were also negative in 2009, 2010, and 2011.

Federal Reserve Operating Procedure Changes

The disparity between performance and volatility for the periods prior to and after October 1979 can be attributed to the Federal Reserve's new operating procedures. Prior to this date, the Fed used the federal funds rate as an operating target. Subsequently, the Fed de-emphasized this rate as an operating target and, instead, began to focus on the manipulation of the money supply (through nonborrowed reserves). As a result, the federal funds rate underwent much greater volatility, thereby bringing about greater volatility in Treasury returns.

In the fall of 1982, however, the Federal Reserve again changed the policy procedures regarding its monetary policy. The Fed abandoned its new monetary controls and returned to a strategy of preventing excessive volatility in interest rates. Volatility in Treasury bill returns from the fall of 1979 through the fall of 1982 was significantly greater than that which has occurred since.

Inflation

The compound annual inflation rate over 1926–2011 was 3.0 percent. The inflation index, initiated at $1.00 at year-end 1925, grew to $12.59 by year-end 2011. The entire increase occurred during the postwar period. The years 1926–1933 were marked by deflation, inflation then raised consumer prices to their 1926 levels by the middle of 1945. After a brief postwar spurt of inflation, prices rose slowly over most of the 1950s and 1960s. Then, in the 1970s, inflation reached a pace unprecedented in peacetime, peaking at 13.3 percent in 1979. The 1980s saw a reversion to more moderate, though still substantial, inflation rates averaging about 5 percent. Inflation rates continued to decline in the 1990s with a compound annual rate of 2.9 percent.

Summary Statistics of Total Returns

Table 2-1 presents summary statistics of the annual total returns on each asset class over the entire 86-year period of 1926–2011. The data presented in these exhibits are described in detail in Chapters 3 and 6.

Table 2-1: Basic Series: Summary Statistics of Annual Total Returns

Series	Geometric Mean (%)	Arithmetic Mean (%)	Standard Deviation (%)	Distribution (%)
Large Company Stocks	9.8	11.8	20.3
Small Company Stocks*	11.9	16.5	32.5
Long-Term Corporate Bonds	6.1	6.4	8.4
Long-Term Government Bonds	5.7	6.1	9.8
Intermediate-Term Government Bonds	5.4	5.5	5.7
U.S. Treasury Bills	3.6	3.6	3.1
Inflation	3.0	3.1	4.2

Data from 1926–2011. * The 1933 Small Company Stocks Total Return was 142.9 percent

Note that in Table 2-1, the arithmetic mean returns are always higher than the geometric mean returns. The difference between these two means is related to the standard deviation, or variability, of the series. [See Chapter 6.]

The “skylines” or histograms in Table 2-1 show the frequency distribution of returns on each asset class. The height of the common stock skyline in the range between +10 and +20 percent, for example, shows the number of years in 1926–2011 that large company stocks had a return in that range. The histograms are shown in 5 percent increments to fully display the spectrum of returns as seen over the last 86 years, especially in stocks.

Riskier assets, such as large company stocks and small company stocks, have low, spread-out skylines, reflecting the broad distribution of returns from very poor to very good. Less risky assets, such as bonds, have narrow skylines that resemble a single tall building, indicating the tightness of the distribution around the mean of the series. The histogram for Treasury bills is one-sided, lying almost entirely to the right of the vertical line representing a zero return; that is, Treasury bills rarely experienced negative returns on a yearly basis over the 1926–2011 period. The inflation skyline shows both positive and negative annual rates. Although a few deflationary months and quarters have occurred recently, the last negative annual inflation rate occurred in 1954.

Capital Appreciation, Income, and Reinvestment Returns

Table 2-2 provides further detail on the returns of large company stocks, long-term government bonds, and intermediate-term government bonds. Total annual returns are shown as the sum of three components: capital appreciation returns, income returns, and reinvestment returns. The capital appreciation and income components are explained in Chapter 3. The third component, reinvestment return, reflects monthly income reinvested in the total return index in subsequent months in the year. Thus, for a single month the reinvestment return is zero, but over a longer period of time it is non-zero. Since the returns in Table 2-2 are annual, reinvestment return is relevant.

The annual total return formed by compounding the monthly total returns does not equal the sum of the annual capital appreciation and income components; the difference is reinvestment return. A simple example illustrates this point. In 1995, an “up” year on a total return basis, the total annual return on large company stocks was 37.58 percent. The annual capital appreciation was 34.11 percent and the annual income return was 3.04 percent, totaling 37.15 percent. The remaining 0.43 percent (37.58 percent minus 37.15 percent) of the 1995 total return came from the reinvestment of dividends in the market. For more information on calculating annual total and income returns, see Chapter 5.

Monthly income and capital appreciation returns for large company stocks are presented in Appendix A: Tables A-2 and A-3, respectively. Monthly income and capital appreciation returns are presented for long-term government

Chapter 1 Highlights of the 2008 Markets and the Past Decade

Events of 2008

In one of the worst years since the Great Depression, the stock market declined significantly in 2008. Both large company stocks and small company stocks declined approximately 37% and experienced remarkable volatility.

The bond market was characterized by a flight to safety, as investors pulled money out of corporate bonds and purchased U.S. Treasuries. On a month-end basis, long-term government bond yields fell to levels not seen since June 1956, and intermediate-term government bond yields fell to levels not seen since December 1949. The Consumer Price Index (a measure of inflation) increased 4.18 percent in the first half of 2008, but declined 3.92 percent in the second half, the largest June to December decrease since 1930.

2008 was a very volatile year in securities markets and a very tumultuous year for business in general. Figure 1.1 displays a timeline of the major events of the year. The purchase of Bear Stearns by JP Morgan made many aware of the tremendous pressure the investment banking industry was facing; however, it wasn't until Lehman Brothers collapsed later in the year that the true weakness of the sector became evident to all. Perhaps even more emblematic was the passage of the $700 billion Emergency Economic Stimulus plan by Congress in the midst of a plummeting stock market. Throughout the year, the government of the United States, as well as others around the globe, took unprecedented action to avoid a total breakdown of financial markets.

Gross Domestic Product (GDP)

The United States Real Gross Domestic Product (GDP), a measure of the market value of all goods and services produced within the U.S., grew at an estimated 1.3 percent in 2008, compared with 2.0 percent in 2007. The first half of 2008 was positive, the second half of 2008 was negative, with quarters one, two, three and four coming in at 0.9 percent, 2.8 percent, -0.5 percent, and an estimated -3.8 percent, respectively.

Since 1970, there have been seven occurrences of lower annual GDP since than what was experienced in 2008: 2001 (0.8 percent), 1991 (-0.2 percent), 1982 (-1.9 percent), 1980 (-0.2 percent), 1975 (-0.2 percent), 1974 (-0.5 percent), and 1970 (0.2 percent). On a quarterly basis since 1970, there have been five occurrences of lower GDP than what was experienced in the fourth quarter of 2008, the most recent being the first quarter of 1982 (-6.4 percent). Overall, there have been 21 occurrences of negative GDP on a quarterly basis since 1970.
