Teresa Siffel

for School Board
Upper Warsaw/Veterans Memorial

My name is Teresa Siffel. I was born, and I grew up in Cincinnati, Ohio. I'm the oldest of four girls. I grew up with my grandparents and great-grandparents around, and I'm very fortunate to still have a 103-year-old great-grandmother and grandmother still in Cincinnati with my mother. For me, family means a lot.

I married my husband, Wes, in May 2000. We moved to Gallatin County in June 2001 — it is home. We have four wonderful children: Cheyenne - a sophomore, Katie - 7th grade, Eli - 2nd grade, and Molly is in kindergarten.

Kate, on the other hand, thinks it's the cutest thing ever and encourages it actively.

Part of why we differ is probably that the risks of irresponsible dating are greater for a girl.

What should I do? I was hoping Kate would be my ally in encouraging the kids to date other people, but no dice.

- Colorado

Wait - what? Ages 16 and 17/18 hardly present scary age or maturity-level gaps.

And, they're dating after getting to know each other with a thoroughness almost impossible to find in the wild.

The "dating other people" that you endorse, on the other hand, would more likely lead to pairings based on looks or physical chemistry, versus knowledge of each other and compatibility, which in turn are more likely to earn the "irresponsible dating" badge.

Indeed, your and Kate's kids might proceed more carefully knowing you and Kate are close.

I'm not a big fan of "encouraging" kids' romances or friendships "actively," because it creates boundary problems. And I also get that a relationship between your kids could someday strain you and Kate.

But this thing is happening, like
