 Moody's® ratings are opinions, not recommendations, to buy or sell, and their accuracy is not guaranteed. A rating should be weighed solely as one factor in an investment decision and you should make your own study and evaluation of any issuer who securities or debt obligations you consider buying or selling.
 Notes: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. Medium-Term-Notes

Moody's® assigns ratings to individual long-term debt securities issued from medium-term note (MTN) programs, in addition to indicating ratings to (MTN) programs themselves. Notes issued under MTN programs with such indicated ratings are rated at issuance at the rating applicable to all pari passu notes issued under the same program, at the program's relevant indicated rating, provided such notes do not exhibit any of the characteristics listed below. For notes with any of the following characteristics, the rating of the individual note may differ from the indicated rating of the program:

- 1) Notes containing features which link the cash flow and/or market value to the credit performance of any third party or parties.
- 2) Notes allowing for negative coupons, or negative principal.
- 3) Notes containing any provision which could obligate the investor to make any additional payments.

Market participants must determine whether any particular note is rated, and if so, at what rating level. Moody's® encourages market participants to contact Moody's® Ratings Desks directly if they have questions regarding ratings for specific notes issued under a medium-term note program.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Medium Term Note Programs
(Not Registered under Securities Act of 1933)
(Not for Public Offer or Sale)

Notes issued under these programs are offered and sold from time to time in privately negotiated transactions without registration under the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Act") under circumstances reasonably designed to preclude a distribution thereof in violation of the Act. Notes so issued may be offered and sold only to or for the account of persons that qualify as "accredited investors", as defined in regulation D under the Act.

Note: Unless specific issues are shown, ratings apply to all general obligation bonds (exceptions being Indiana and Pennsylvania). Indiana School Building Corporation bonds and Pennsylvania School Authority bonds are payable from annual lease rentals. Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. For standard abbreviations, see page 8.

(P) See Key on page 7. * Refunded; we express no opinion. # Advance refunded issues secured by escrowed funds held in cash, held in trust, or invested in direct non-callable United States government obligations or those non-callable obligations unconditionally guaranteed by the U. S. government. Also deemed an eligible investment are refunded bonds which bear Moody's® #Aaa rating and meet all other structural criteria. Full faith and credit of municipality (and county) for which bonds were issued. < Rating applicable to the portion for which FSLIC/FDIC insurance is available-currently up to a maximum of $100,000 for each bondholder. (Dutch Auction) See limitations and uses for ratings on page 6.

Structured Finance Issues (Revised)

Table with columns: CUSIP, ISSUE, MOODY'S RATING, INTEREST DATES, AMT. ISS. MIL. $, ISSUED. The table lists various structured finance issues, including mortgage-backed securities, commercial mortgage-backed securities, and other debt instruments, with their respective ratings and terms.

Notes: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. For standard abbreviations and symbols, see page 6.

Medium-Term-Notes (New)

Moody's® assigns ratings to individual long-term debt securities issued from medium-term note (MTN) programs, in addition to indicating ratings to (MTN) programs themselves. Notes issued under MTN programs with such indicated ratings are rated at issuance at the rating applicable to all pari passu notes issued under the same program, at the program's relevant indicated rating, provided such notes do not exhibit any of the characteristics listed below. For notes with any of the following characteristics, the rating of the individual note may differ from the indicated rating of the program:

- 1) Notes containing features which link the cash flow and/or market value to the credit performance of any third party or parties.
- 2) Notes allowing for negative coupons, or negative principal.
- 3) Notes containing any provision which could obligate the investor to make any additional payments.

Market participants must determine whether any particular note is rated, and if so, at what rating level. Moody's® encourages market participants to contact Moody's® Ratings Desks directly if they have questions regarding ratings for specific notes issued under a medium-term note program.

Medium Term Note Programs (New)
(Not Registered under Securities Act of 1933)
(Not for Public Offer or Sale)

Notes issued under these programs are offered and sold from time to time in privately negotiated transactions without registration under the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Act") under circumstances reasonably designed to preclude a distribution thereof in violation of the Act. Notes so issued may be offered and sold only to or for the account of persons that qualify as "accredited investors", as defined in regulation D under the Act.

Medium-Term-Notes (Revised)

Moody's® assigns ratings to individual long-term debt securities issued from medium-term note (MTN) programs, in addition to indicating ratings to (MTN) programs themselves. Notes issued under MTN programs with such indicated ratings are rated at issuance at the rating applicable to all pari passu notes issued under the same program, at the program's relevant indicated rating, provided such notes do not exhibit any of the characteristics listed below. For notes with any of the following characteristics, the rating of the individual note may differ from the indicated rating of the program:

- 1) Notes containing features which link the cash flow and/or market value to the credit performance of any third party or parties.
- 2) Notes allowing for negative coupons, or negative principal.
- 3) Notes containing any provision which could obligate the investor to make any additional payments.

Market participants must determine whether any particular note is rated, and if so, at what rating level. Moody's® encourages market participants to contact Moody's® Ratings Desks directly if they have questions regarding ratings for specific notes issued under a medium-term note program.

Note: Moody's® ratings are subject to change. Because of the possible time lapse between Moody's® assignment or change of a rating and your use of this monthly publication, we suggest you verify the current rating of any security or issuer in which you are interested. * Amount outstanding is reflected in US dollars. The Local Currency column refers to the foreign domicile of the debt issue.

Medium Term Note Programs (Revised)
(Not Registered under Securities Act of 1933)
(Not for Public Offer or Sale)

Notes issued under these programs are offered and sold from time to time in privately negotiated transactions without registration under the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Act") under circumstances reasonably designed to preclude a distribution thereof in violation of the Act. Notes so issued may be offered and sold only to or for the account of persons that qualify as "accredited investors", as defined in regulation D under the Act.

Fed Chief Says No Need to Change Interest Rates at Present

Jerome Powell says policy makers have 'adopted a patient, wait-and-see approach'

The Federal Reserve doesn't need to change its interest-rate policy right now against a mixed backdrop of restrained price pressures, a generally strong U.S. labor market and slower global growth, Chairman Jerome Powell said in a speech Friday night.

"With nothing in the outlook demanding an immediate policy response," the central bank has "adopted a patient, wait-and-see approach to considering any alteration in the stance of policy," Mr. Powell said in remarks to the Stanford Institute of Economic Policy Research in Stanford, Calif.

Fed officials raised the short-term benchmark rate in December to a range between 2.25% and 2.5%, but have since shelved plans for further increases after markets swooned late last year on concerns over slowing global growth.

Mr. Powell's remarks followed the European Central Bank's surprise announcement Thursday of new plans to stimulate the eurozone economy before a slowdown deepens. Central banks in Canada and Australia this week also noted rising risks to the outlook.

Mr. Powell's speech also came on the heels of a mixed U.S. employment report that showed hiring essentially stalled in February, but the unemployment rate fell and wages rose at their best annual pace in several years.

Fed officials last year had been raising rates toward a neutral setting designed to neither spur nor slow growth. Mr. Powell said Friday the benchmark rate was "now within the broad range of estimates of the neutral rate" and that his colleagues on the central bank's rate-setting committee "generally agree that this policy stance is appropriate."

With the Fed done raising interest rates for now, officials have focused in recent months on when to stop shrinking the central bank's $4 trillion asset portfolio. They began paring holdings of Treasury and mortgage securities in October 2017 by allowing bonds to mature without replacing them. The holdings reached a peak of $4.5 trillion, or 25% of gross domestic product, in 2014, up from 6%, or less than $1 trillion, before the 2008 financial crisis.

Mr. Powell said Friday the latest estimates indicate the Fed's balance sheet would reach its "new normal" size at some point in the fourth quarter, meaning officials could terminate the runoff process around then.

"In some ways, we are returning to the precrisis normal. In other ways, things will be different," Mr. Powell said. "The world has moved on in the last decade, and attempting to re-create the past would be neither practical nor wise."

The current process of shrinking the asset portfolio is "well along," Mr. Powell added, and he said officials are close to resolving their plan to conclude the runoff. Their next policy meeting is set for March 19-20.

When the Fed bought trillions of dollars of bonds to spur growth in response to the financial crisis, it created bank deposits, known as reserves. Meanwhile, new liquidity regulations have made reserves a particularly attractive asset for banks.

As the Fed's holdings mature, it is draining reserves from the banking system. Eventually, reserve scarcity could lead banks to charge more in overnight interbank lending markets, causing the Fed's benchmark interest rate to rise.

Fed officials want to stop the runoff before that happens. The upshot is that while concerns about the economy drove their decision to expand the holdings, their plans now are being driven primarily by operational issues related to complex monetary plumbing.

Once the runoff ends, officials could hold the size of the balance sheet constant for some interval to allow reserves to very gradually shrink further as other Fed liabilities, such as currency, increase. Mr. Powell said the Fed would announce details of this plan "reasonably soon."

Separately, he said the Fed was looking to fine-tune another crisis-era communications device.

The Fed has worked over the past year to prune its official policy statement of guidance about the future path of interest rates, and officials in January removed the last vestige of such postcrisis-era guidance.

But since 2012, Fed policy makers also have released their individual rate projections on a quarterly basis.

Providing the dot matrix of rate projections, known as a “dot plot,” has complicated the Fed’s communications because the information can be easily misread, Mr. Powell said. He said he had asked a Fed subcommittee to explore ways that might make the projections less confusing.

“If properly understood, the dot plot can be a constructive element of comprehensive policy communication,” Mr. Powell said. But because officials are pulling back on the forward guidance in the rate-setting committee’s formal policy statement, “we will need to find other ways to address the collateral confusion that sometimes surrounds the dots.”

To make his point, Mr. Powell presented with his speech images of a painting by Georges Seurat, the French post-Impressionist. Before displaying the full image, he showed a blurry, zoomed-in snippet. “As you can see, if you are too focused on a few dots, you may miss the larger picture,” he said.

Transcript of Chairman Powell's Press Conference
January 30, 2019

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Good afternoon, everyone, and welcome. I will start with a recap of our discussions, including our assessment of the outlook for the economy and the judgments we made about our interest rate policy and our balance sheet. I will cover the decisions we made today as well as our ongoing discussions of matters on which we expect to make decisions in coming meetings.

My colleagues and I have one overarching goal: to sustain the economic expansion, with a strong job market and stable prices, for the benefit of the American people. The U.S. economy is in a good place, and we will continue to use our monetary policy tools to help keep it there. The jobs picture continues to be strong, with the unemployment rate near historic lows and with stronger wage gains. Inflation remains near our 2 percent goal. We continue to expect that the American economy will grow at a solid pace in 2019, although likely slower than the very strong pace of 2018. We believe that our current policy stance is appropriate at this time.

Despite this positive outlook, over the past few months we have seen some crosscurrents and conflicting signals about the outlook. Growth has slowed in some major foreign economies, particularly in China and Europe. There is elevated uncertainty around several unresolved government policy issues, including Brexit, ongoing trade negotiations, and the effects from the partial government shutdown in the United States. Financial conditions tightened considerably late in 2018 and remain less supportive of growth than they were earlier in 2018. And, while most of the incoming domestic economic data have been solid, some surveys of business and consumer sentiment have moved lower, giving reason for caution.

We always emphasize that our policies are data dependent. In other words, as economic conditions and the outlook evolve, we take that new information into account in setting our policies. We are now facing a somewhat contradictory picture of generally strong U.S. macroeconomic performance alongside growing evidence of crosscurrents. At such times, common-sense risk management suggests patiently awaiting greater clarity—an approach that has served policymakers well in the past. With that in mind, I'd like to spell out how the Federal Open Market Committee has been thinking about these issues.

At our December meeting, we noted the solid outlook for steady growth, vigorous job creation, and price stability. We also stressed that the extent and timing of any rate increases were uncertain and would depend on incoming data and the evolving outlook. We therefore said that we would be paying close attention to global economic and financial developments and assessing their implications for the economic outlook.

Today the FOMC decided that the cumulative effects of those developments over the last several months warrant a patient, wait-and-see approach regarding future policy changes. In particular, our statement today says, "In light of global economic and financial developments and muted inflation pressures, the Committee will be patient as it determines what future adjustments to the target range for the federal funds rate may be appropriate."

This change was not driven by a major shift in the baseline outlook for the economy. Like many forecasters, we still see "sustained expansion of economic activity, strong labor market conditions, and inflation near . . . 2 percent" as the likeliest case. But the crosscurrents I mentioned suggest the risk of a less favorable outlook. In addition, the case for raising rates has weakened somewhat. The traditional case for rate increases is to protect the economy from risks that arise when rates are too low for too long, particularly the risk of too-high inflation. Over the past few months, that risk appears to have diminished. Inflation readings have been muted, and the recent drop in oil prices is likely to push headline inflation lower still in coming months. Further, as we noted in our postmeeting statement, while survey-based measures of inflation expectations have been stable, financial market measures of inflation compensation have moved lower. Similarly, the balance—the risk of financial imbalances appears to have receded, as a number of indicators that showed elevated levels of financial risk appetite last fall have moved closer to historical norms. In this environment, we believe we can best support the economy by being patient in evaluating the outlook before making any future adjustment to policy.

Let me now turn to balance sheet normalization. Over its past three meetings, the FOMC has held in-depth discussions on the final stages of this process. Today we made some important progress in clarifying the path forward, as summarized in the Statement Regarding Monetary Policy Implementation and Balance Sheet Normalization that we released with today's FOMC statement.

The Committee made the fundamental decision today to continue indefinitely using our current operating procedure for implementing monetary policy. That is, we will continue to use our administered rates to control the policy rate with an ample supply of reserves so that active management of reserves is not required. This is often called a “floor system” or an “abundant reserves system.” Under the current set of operating procedures, as outlined in the implementation note released today, this means that the federal funds rate, our active policy tool, is held within its target range by appropriately setting the Federal Reserve's administered rates of interest on reserves, as well as the offer rate on the overnight reverse repo facility, without managing the supply of reserves actively. As the minutes of our recent discussions have indicated, the FOMC strongly believes that this approach provides good control of short-term money market rates in a variety of market conditions and effective transmission of those rates to broader financial conditions.

Settling this central question clears the way for the FOMC to address a number of further questions regarding the remaining stages of balance sheet normalization. The decision to retain our current operating procedure means that, after allowing for currency in circulation, the ultimate size of our balance sheet will be driven principally by financial institutions' demand for reserves, plus a buffer so that fluctuations in reserve demand do not require us to make frequent sizable market interventions. Estimates of the level of reserve demand are quite uncertain, but we know that this demand in the post-crisis environment is far larger than before. Higher reserve holdings are an important part of the stronger liquidity position that financial institutions must now hold. Moreover, based on surveys and market intelligence, current estimates of reserve demand are considerably higher than estimates of a year or so ago. The implication is that the normalization of the size of the portfolio will be completed sooner, and with a larger balance sheet, than in previous estimates.

In light of these estimates and the substantial progress we have made in reducing reserves, the Committee is now evaluating the appropriate timing for the end of balance sheet runoff. This decision will likely be part of a plan for gradually reaching our ultimate balance sheet goals while minimizing risks to achieving our dual-mandate objectives and avoiding unnecessary market disruption. We will be finalizing these plans at coming meetings.

The process of balance sheet normalization is unprecedented. Throughout this process we've attempted to lay out our plans well in advance, and we've been willing to make changes as we learn more about the process. The implementation and normalization statement released today is intended to provide some additional clarity regarding the conditions under which we might adjust our plans. The statement makes three points: First, as we've long emphasized, the federal funds rate is our active monetary policy tool.

Second, as far as the particular details of normalization are concerned, we will not hesitate to make changes in light of economic and financial developments. This does not mean that we would use the balance sheet as an active tool, but occasional changes could be warranted.

Third, we repeat a sentence of the normalization principles we adopted in June of 2017. While the federal funds rate would remain our active tool of policy in a wide range of scenarios, we recognize that the economy could again present conditions in which federal funds rate policy is not sufficient. In those cases, the FOMC would be prepared to use its full range of tools, including balance sheet policy.

Times of economic uncertainty put a premium on the clarity and predictability of FOMC policy. We are committed to clearly explaining what we are doing and why we're doing it, both regarding the path of rates and also regarding management of the balance sheet. We believe that this transparency is how we can best contribute to macroeconomic stability.

Thank you. I'll be glad to take your questions.

HOWARD SCHNEIDER. Howard Schneider with Reuters. So you've said many times recently that policy was still accommodative and that it needn't be so. You've said recently that policy—the state of the policy was still accommodative and that the economy didn't require that anymore. Is that still the case? If so, how do you justify the removal of the need for some further interest rate increases? Basically, are we at neutral now, or does the economy still need accommodation?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. We think that our policy is at the appropriate point right now. We think our policy stance is appropriate right now. We do. We also know that our policy rate is now in the range of the Committee's estimates of neutral. So we'll be—again, we think our policy stance is appropriate.

HEATHER LONG. Heather Long from the Washington Post. Last week, the IMF said risks are clearly skewed to the downside for the U.S. and global economy. Can you clarify—does the FOMC see risks as skewed to the downside, particularly after you removed the statement about risks being balanced?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. We had an extensive discussion of the baseline and also of the risks to the baseline, and the risks are, of course, the fact that financial conditions have tightened, that global growth has slowed, as well as some, let's say, government-related risks like Brexit and trade discussions, and also the effects and ultimate disposition of the shutdown. So we looked at—we look at those, and the way we think of it is that policy—we will use our policy, and we have, to offset risks to the baseline. So we view the baseline as still solid, and part of that is the way we adjusted our baseline to address those risks. So that's the way we're thinking about that now.

SAM FLEMING. Thanks. Sam Fleming from the Financial Times. The Fed has linked its commitment to patience in part to subdued inflation outcomes. Would you be comfortable with continuing patience even if there are modest, if transient, overshoots to the inflation target by core inflation? How sensitive are you right now to developments in core inflation when determining the next move? Thanks.

CHAIRMAN POWELL. You know, generally speaking, we think the outlook is favorable, and we think that these crosscurrents that I referred to—these risks—are going to be with us for a while. We think our stance is appropriate. We think there's no pressing need to change our policy stance and no need to rush to judgment there.

I would say that we'll be looking at a full range of data, and that will include inflation data. It will include all data relevant to our dual mandate of stable prices and maximum employment. Remember that our inflation objective is a symmetric one, meaning that we are—we're always trying to get to 2 percent, and we don't look at—we look at inflation equally on both sides. So I can't get into specific hypotheticals, but I do believe that we have a symmetric objective, and I believe we'll act that way.

RICHARD MILLER. We learned from the last minutes of the meeting that some of the tweaks you make to the statement have a lot more portent than we thought. In light of that, I'm wondering if you can provide us with a "decoder ring" for this statement. "Adjustments"—does that suggest the next move in interest rates is as likely to be up as down? And when you twin "in light of global economic and financial developments" with "muted inflation pressures," does that suggest you have to see both the cessation of these crosscurrents that you've talked about and inflation moving up before you get off the dime, so to speak, and move?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Sorry—say again what the first question was?

RICHARD MILLER. First question is, "adjustments"—is that meant to imply the next move is as most likely to be up as down?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Yes. I'm just going to say that the—it's going to depend entirely on the data. We're not making a judgment. We don't have a strong prior. We will be—we will patiently wait and let the data clarify. Some of the crosscurrents that I refer to may be with us for a while, and I think we'll be looking at seeing those clear up as it relates to—as they relate to the outlook for the U.S. and that will be an important aspect as well. Your second question was?

RICHARD MILLER. Would it be not just the cessation of those crosscurrents, but the end of these muted inflation pressures—are they both sort of things that are necessary for you to change this “patient” stance?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. You know, it's really hard to speak about generalities. We'll be looking at everything, but I do think that, you know, muted inflation pressures—you know, you would want—I would want to see a need for further rate increases, and, for me, a big part of that would be inflation. It wouldn't be the only thing, but it would certainly be important.

STEVE LIESMAN. Steve Liesman, CNBC. Mr. Chairman, did the Committee discuss an actual change to the runoff policy or the runoff schedule right now? If so, is that under consideration right now, and when might we know? The second thing is, I have to nail down this thing. You guys, Fed folks, keep mentioning the “market average” or the “market outlook” for the size of the balance sheet. Are you endorsing the market average, which is 3½ trillion? And if you're not endorsing it, why do you keep mentioning it?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Okay. So today I'm here to talk about decisions and also discussions about decisions that haven't been made. So we're talking about the latter thing, which is discussions, and so I can't get ahead of where decisions are. But so the Committee is—what we're looking to do is create a whole plan that will bring us to our goal, our longer-run goal, which is a balance sheet no larger than it needs to be for us to efficiently conduct—efficiently and effectively conduct monetary policy, but to do so in a way that doesn't put our goals at risk or result in unnecessary market turmoil. So there are a lot of pieces to that, and we've learned over time that it's—when making these—when designing these plans, like, for example, the original normalization plan, it's good to take your time. Let the best ideas rise to the top. Let them stand the test of time and argument and then move when you're really comfortable with what you've got and when you feel you can communicate it clearly. So I don't want to get ahead of that process today.

But—so we've discussed—there are a number of pieces to that puzzle. There are several different pieces to them, and I think they're coming—and I'm very pleased with the progress that we've made, and, you know, the piece that you mentioned is something that is in those discussions. That's the first question. I'm not going to give our estimate or ratify anybody else's estimate of what the equilibrium balance sheet is here today. There are estimates out there, but I'm not at a point today where I'm going to be giving out numbers on that. But there are estimates, and I think they're consistent with what I said, broadly speaking.

STEVE LIESMAN. So, just to clarify—I'm sorry, you did discuss reducing the pace of the runoff? That sounds like what you said, to me.

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Yes, it's—so, again, we haven't made any decisions. There no decisions have been made. There are different pieces of the thing, and that is in the discussion as one of many pieces that is in the discussion. And that was reflected in the last minutes, actually.

NICK TIMIRAOS. Thanks. Nick Timiraos of the Wall Street Journal. Chairman Powell, I want to follow up on Steve's question. The size of the balance sheet obviously matters a great deal, but, so, too, if you follow the arguments that were made when the Fed was purchasing these assets, does the duration of those holdings. So once you are—once you reach the terminal level of reserves and you have to reinvest maturing mortgage-backed securities into Treasuries, it will matter a great deal, of course, where along the curve the Fed resumes those reinvestments.

And so I wonder, what does your staff research show about the degree of accommodation that would be provided by either moving to the front end of the curve and holding or investing, perhaps, in shorter maturity assets, versus the other approach that was identified in the December meeting minutes, which would be to simply reflect issuance of the outstanding Treasury maturities? And which approach do you think is more appropriate in the current environment?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. These are great questions. Let me say that the question of the ultimate composition of our balance sheet in the longer run is a very important one, and it's one that we see ourselves as coming to, you know, fairly soon, as in, in coming meetings. It won't be the first thing we work on, but it will be one of the first things that we try to resolve. We had discussions at one of the last two meetings on this, and we haven't come to a judgment on that. And, you know, I wouldn't comment beyond saying that we understand that's a key question, and there are, you know, there are issues to be decided. There are benefits and costs to doing—to taking different approaches, and I wouldn't want to prejudge them today.

BINYAMIN APPELBAUM. Binya Appelbaum, New York Times. I am struggling a little bit to understand what has changed since we sat here with you six weeks ago. You've said today that you think that inflation would be the reason that the Fed would need to continue raising rates. Has the inflation outlook shifted that dramatically in the last six weeks? Can you speak specifically to why you've moved from a posture of saying we expect to keep raising rates this year to a posture of standing still?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. I'd point to a couple of things. First, the narrative of slowing global growth continues, if you will. The incoming data have shown more of that. We've seen that both in China and in Western Europe, and so that's an important—that has important implications for us, and that story has—let's just say it continues.

And, in addition—I mean, I think important—possibly less important now—probably less important now, but—has been the shutdown, which will leave some sort of imprint on first-quarter GDP. We don't know the ultimate resolution of it. If that's all there is, and the shutdown is gone and there isn't another shutdown, then we'll get most of that back in the second period—second quarter.

So those things—in addition, you know, you have to look back. Financial conditions began to tighten in the fourth quarter. And they now have persisted and remain tighter—significantly tighter, let's say—than they were, and that's something that we have to take into account as well. So that's where we are.

MICHAEL MCKEE. Michael McKee from Bloomberg Television and Radio. You said you like to be a plain speaker, so let me try to have you put this as plainly as possible. Is it fair to characterize this as not a pause in a tightening cycle, but the end of the tightening cycle now—a new regime for the Fed? And, if not, can you put a time frame on “patient”? Does “patient” have some sort of time frame? And I'm wondering about your reaction to the criticism you got on your December 19th news conference, your later statements—do you feel you've put a “Powell put” into the markets?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So, patience—I think we're going to know in hindsight, because the length of this patient period is going to depend entirely on incoming data and its implications for the outlook. So that's going to be—so it's hard to say, you know, it's hard to think of what to call it at this point or how to label it.

So really, your second question is about how do we think about financial conditions. And I would say this: We think about a broad range of financial conditions, not just one or two things. You know, it's interest rates, it's risk spreads, it's currency, it's the stock market, it's credit availability, it's many, many factors. And what matters for financial conditions is, when there are changes and those changes are sustained for a period of time, then they become important for us because they have important macroeconomic implications. So that's how we think about it.

So we don't react to, you know, to most things that happen in the financial markets. But when we see a sustained change in financial conditions, then that's something that has to play into our thinking. In fact, our policy works through changing financial conditions, so it's sort of the essence of what we do.

VICTORIA GUIDA. Victoria Guida with Politico. I just wanted to ask, first of all, about whether the Fed is gathering information about some of the new money laundering information that's come out about Deutsche Bank and Danske Bank and whether you have any concerns there? And then, also, I was just wondering if you could say whether there's any kind of timeline on when the Fed might make a decision on real-time payments and whether you're going to build a real-time payment system?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Right. So, on the first question, I can—we don't comment on individual investigations or whether they're happening. I will say that we take our enforcement powers very seriously, and we put them to work when we feel it's justified.

In terms of real-time payments, it's something we're very actively working on. As you obviously know, we have some proposals out, and we're considering them. You know, the thing is, it's very important in that space to consult with the full range of market participants and interest groups, consumer groups, and we've done that, as I'm sure you know, over a period of years. We don't have plenary authority to just do things, for the most part, in the payment space. We've been more of a convener, bringing industry and the public—public interest groups—and all those groups around the table. And we've—I think we've played a constructive role in that respect, and I believe that will continue.

JIM PUZZANGHERA. Thanks. Jim Puzzanghera with the L.A. Times. You and your colleagues may have noticed, President Trump, for the past six months, has been urging the Fed not to raise rates—to stop raising rates. How would you respond to those who would suggest that the Fed just caved to the president's demands?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So what we care about—and, really, the only thing we care about at the Fed—is doing our job for the American people and using our tools appropriately. So that's very strongly our culture. I think anyone who knows the Fed or who has worked at the Fed would recognize that description. So we're always going to do what we think is the right thing. We're never going to take political considerations into account or discuss them as part of our work. You know, we're human. We make mistakes. But we're not going to make mistakes of character or integrity. And I would want the public to know that, and I would want them to see that in our actions.

EDWARD LAWRENCE. Edward Lawrence from Fox Business News. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The long-term federal funds rate is 2.8 percent. I've talked the last year with a number of Fed presidents who worry that under 3 percent is not enough to handle the next recession. You say that's your first tool, that's your primary means of adjusting monetary policy. So with a larger balance sheet—with a larger balance sheet, could you—how could you handle that next recession, then, with the combination of those two?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. I guess the sense of your question is that we could be in a situation in the future—we hope not, but—we could be in a situation where we'd like to cut rates more than we can effectively, and we hit the zero lower bound. We don't think anything like that is in the cards. Now, there's no reason to think that it would be. But as we said in today's release, if that happens, then we'll use the full range of our tools, and that includes the balance sheet. But we would use it after using our conventional tools, which would be the interest rate and forward guidance about the interest rate.

EDWARD LAWRENCE. Even if you have a large balance sheet—$4 trillion? Above $4 trillion?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Yes. There would be room to do substantially more.

DONNA BORAK. Chairman Powell, Donna Borak with CNN. I just wanted to go back to—you had mentioned on the crosscurrents, the government shutdown issue. You mentioned a couple of weeks ago that that information would clearly show up in the data. I'm wondering, as you guys discussed during this week's meeting, what the potential economic impact would be of the shutdown, the possibility of a second one, whether or not it would diminish consumer confidence, have some severe ripple effects? Just talking to other folks outside, businesses—clearly they were suffering and seeing a lot of pain. I'm just wondering about, for American families that missed two paychecks, how is this going to play out for them for the months to come?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Right. So let me give you the economic side of it first—is that, even with a fairly long shutdown, as long as that's the end of it and everyone gets their backpay—except the contractors, I guess, the private-sector contractors, but—some people get their backpay, then the lost GDP will be regained in the second quarter. So that's that. I would say that the—you know, we all see the suffering and the heartbreak and all the pain people go through. I see, you know, federal employees doing their work, and I'm, you know, really grateful they did. I mean, to be doing your work while you're not getting paid, it's something we should all be grateful for. Did that answer both your questions?

DONNA BORAK. Yes, it does. So you don't see a permanent effect of this shutdown? And I'm just wondering if you're thinking about the path of future policy and the possibility of reaching this point again on February 15?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So would there be a permanent effect? As I mentioned, there wouldn't be if there isn't another shutdown. If there were going to be a permanent effect or a lasting effect, let's say, it would be from a longer shutdown or perhaps a second shutdown, and that would be through the channel of a loss of confidence in our ability to make policy in the United States. That would be the channel. And I think that was something that we and many others were worried about as there was talk of an even longer shutdown. In terms of ideas for not having more shutdowns, I know Congress is actually looking at some of those, so I think that could be a profitable thing to explore.

MARTIN CRUTSINGER. Marty Crutsinger, AP. The Beige Book that was prepared for this meeting noted a rising concern among business contacts about higher trade tariffs and the tensions there. Did that play a part in the discussion and the decision that you made on shifting the wording in your statement?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So, trade—you sound like you're an avid reader of the Beige Book, and that's great—the trade, as you will know, then—trade has been a big feature in the Beige Book for some time now. The Beige Book is a collection of all of our—of the comments that our Reserve Bank presidents get from their Districts. It's incredibly valuable, because you're getting actual reports from people who are on the line. And there have been real concerns about trade right along the line, both in terms of availability of materials and costs and retaliation and that kind of thing. So that's been a concern.

I would say the longer-term concern, though, is the negotiations that are going on. If they linger, then there could be more and more uncertainty, and you worry over time that that could have an effect on business confidence. So far, the actual amount of tariffs that have been applied both here and in China is not enough to have material effects on GDP either here or in China. So the concern is more a longer—for me—a longer, drawn-out set of negotiations back and forth, which could result in sapping business confidence. Uncertainty is not the friend of business.

NANCY MARSHALL-GENZER. I'm Nancy Marshall-Genzer from Marketplace. I want to talk to you about corporate debt. Are you worried that by taking a pause in raising interest rates—we've had low interest rates for so long—are you contributing to a bubble in corporate debt?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So, we did—we've called out corporate debt as a risk—more of a macroeconomic risk, I think, than a financial stability risk, the sense of that being that if you have companies that are highly levered and we do go into a downturn, they're going to be less able to weather that and keep serving their customers and, you know, may have to do layoffs and things like that. So they can amplify, in effect, a negative downturn. So we watch that.

We also watch carefully for the exposure of the financial system to these companies. In other words, banks are arranging a lot of these loans. The question is, what is their exposure? Do they retain big pieces of the loans? Do they have obligations to underwrite loans which build up in a pipeline? So we monitor those risks very carefully. And, frankly, the banks monitor them much better with our support and help than they did before the crisis. So it's a concern. It's something that we're watching. Of course, you know, November, December, and January were much slower months for those sorts of things. But, you know, it'll be something that we're always paying close attention to.

GREG ROBB. Chairman Powell, Greg Robb from MarketWatch. Financial markets have reacted strongly to the decision and the press conference. The Dow Jones industrial average is up more than, like, 500 points. There's a sense in the market that there's, you know, what people call the "Powell put" on the markets. Are financial markets wrong in that assessment?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. You know, I would point to all the continuity here. You know, the thing we did on the balance sheet is something we've been working on for, frankly, years—the thing we announced today. And so we're providing clarity there. I think that's a constructive thing to do.

My—honestly—only motivation is to do the right thing for the economy and for the American people—that's it. And this situation, I think, calls for patience—I think it does. And it's just the stance of policy we think is appropriate. We see these uncertainties, and we see a time when we can afford to—we have the luxury of being able to wait and watch, and that's what we're planning to do. And I think it's the right thing. I feel strongly that it is.

JOHN HELTMAN. Chairman Powell, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency last year completed its fintech charter. And one of the questions around that charter has been whether the Federal Reserve will allow such a chartered bank to access the payment system. I'm curious if you think a fintech charter is a good idea in general, and what conditions you think might be necessary to allow the Fed to allow such a chartered institution access to the payment system.

CHAIRMAN POWELL. I'm not going to be able to help you much on that. Those are great questions, and those are questions that are, you know, that our great supervisory people are looking at. I think we're open to these ideas, but I don't have any news for you on that today.

STEVE BECKNER. Thank you. Steve Beckner, freelance journalist reporting for NPR. Mr. Chairman, you've echoed the widespread concern about slowing growth in China and elsewhere in the world, but I wonder whether it's possible that slower growth abroad might actually be beneficial to this country, in some respects, at least—for example, perhaps increasing capital inflows and putting downward pressure on long-term rates in this country, as happened in the Asian financial crisis in the late '90s.

CHAIRMAN POWELL. You know, Steve, it's certainly possible. Ultimately, though, you know, a strong global economy is good for us. We export to these countries. We trade with these countries. I mean, part of the story of 2017, for example, was that European growth kept coming in stronger and stronger, and that meant the euro was strong, and that supported our exports. So, ultimately, I think we benefit from having strong growth abroad, although you point to an interesting case.

MARK HAMRICK. Chairman Powell, Mark Hamrick with Bankrate. Thank you. As you probably heard, the Congressional Budget Office is projecting that federal debt is expected to surge to about $29 trillion over the next 10 years, reaching the highest share since the end of World War II. First of all, does that sound like it could be a reasonable forecast, with the Administration seeming to take plenty of opportunities to question the legitimacy of CBO? And then, secondly, what effect does that have on interest rates and the public if indeed that's even close to being true?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So, first, it is important—we don't do fiscal policy. We don't advise the government or Congress on fiscal policy, so I'll limit myself to more high-level comments and say that it is not a secret—it is a long-known fact that the U.S. federal government budget is on an unsustainable path, and that needs to be addressed. And that is driven principally by the combination of health-care costs—really, due to our health-care delivery system—and the aging of the population. And there's no time like now—when the economy is healthy, growing, people are working—to go after that problem. Ultimately, we will have to. We don't have a forecast. We don't forecast those things. I have no reason to doubt CBO's numbers on this. I haven't actually looked at that report, but my general experience with them is that it's a professional outfit.

MARK HAMRICK. What does that look like, if that really takes place 10 years down the road?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So, you know, first of all, our—the work that we do relates more to the medium term rather than the long term. And so I don't see this, in particular, as a threat to this business cycle or to the economy this year. It's more in the longer run, we'll be spending all of our money on paying interest and not on the things that we really need to be doing for future generations and for our own generation. So it's a serious problem, but it's not a problem that is something that either helps or prevents the Fed from doing our job today.

PAUL KIERNAN. Hi, Chairman. Paul Kiernan from Dow Jones Newswires. I know where the FOMC participants' estimates for the long-run interest rate are. They're all above 2½ percent. Right now we're between 2.25 and 2½. So I think a key question right now is, is policy accommodative at this moment? Are we looking at staying accommodative for some time, or has your estimate of neutral come down, in light of the recent volatility in markets? Thanks.

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So the range of estimates on the Committee starts at 2½ percent, and that's kind of roughly where we currently are. And as I've said a couple of times, when you get to that range—you know that we can't directly observe the neutral rate. We only know it by its works. And so we have to put aside our own priors of what that rate might be and let the data speak to us. So we can do that. We're in the range. There are a number of Committee members who are, you know, right around that range. And I think we're watching to see.

We don't—I don't—again, I think that our policy stance today is appropriate for the state of the economy. That's my feeling. We're going to be watching data to see whether that's right, and we're also going to be watching data to see how these crosscurrents resolve themselves and how the U.S. economy performs this year.

VIRGINIE MONTET. Thank you. Virginie Montet with Agence France-Presse. Among the global developments that the Fed is monitoring, how much of a risk for the American expansion would be the prospect of a “hard” Brexit?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. So we've been monitoring the Brexit situation very carefully for a long time. And for us, that starts with U.S. financial institutions that have a presence either in the U.K. or in the EU or both. So we have worked with those institutions alongside U.K. and EU regulators to assure ourselves that those firms have plans and have liquidity and have all of the things they will need to deal with the full range of Brexit outcomes. So we've done a lot of work on that, and, generally speaking—again, a lot of work has been done—we have to be humble and say that this is an unprecedented event. But that's the financial system aspect of it.

If there is a hard Brexit, then that would very likely involve disruptions both to the continental economy and certainly to the U.K. economy, and we would feel that. The question for us—it wouldn't be a huge first-order thing, the economic effects, unless you saw financial disruptions. So, if you saw financial turmoil and that kind of thing, that would be the way it would reach us.

I would expect that we would feel some of this, and it's very hard to have great confidence that you know what that would be. But it would be something—probably not material to our economy, but it's something we'll be watching very carefully and certainly hoping that there is a resolution short of a hard Brexit.

JEAN YUNG. Hi, I'm Jean Yung with Market News. I have a question about the ultimate size of the balance sheet. How will the Fed judge what is a reasonable level for financial institutions' demand for reserves when it appears to be rising at a fast pace over the past year and perhaps at a faster pace than can be explained by regulatory changes during that same time frame? Would you prefer to err on the side of being more generous, or would you try to encourage banks from holding—to hold less reserves?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. Let me be clear. I don't know that demand for reserves has risen over the past years. I think our understanding of demand for reserves—remember that the banks have more reserves than they need. Reserves are still quite abundant.

So the question is, how much of that amount is actually going to be needed in the end after, you know, after the firms adjust to our very gradual decrease? And so our understanding, really, of the distribution of reserves and how much will be needed has moved up over the past year. And then there would be a buffer on top of that. And then we would want to be—we would want to have a buffer, as I mentioned in my remarks, because we want to be operating in an abundant reserves regime where we operate through our administered rates.

If you operate too close to that point of scarcity, then you wind up having to have these big, ongoing interventions in the market. We don't want the Fed to have a, you know, a large ongoing presence in the market around this. We'd rather just, you know—in managing the federal funds rate, we'd rather have it set by our administered rates. So that implies you'd want to be a bit above what that equilibrium demand for reserves is.

And, again, there's no cookbook here, there's no playbook. No one really knows. The only way you can figure it out is by surveying people and market intelligence and then, ultimately, by approaching that point quite carefully.

JEAN YUNG. But do you take the survey results as given, or do you try to encourage banks from holding a [inaudible]?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. We don't take—you know, we don't think we have a precise understanding of this at all. I want to be clear about that. These estimates are fairly uncertain. So if you think that the level of demand for reserves is here [gesturing with hands together, in the middle], all you can say is, it's probably somewhere in this range [gesturing with hands apart, equidistant from the middle].

If banks want to use reserves for a good and sufficient reason—which is to say, to hold liquidity as we require them to do to meet the liquidity coverage ratio, to meet their resolution requirements and resolution planning—we're not going to discourage them from holding them. They are, in fact, a very safe asset—in a way, the safest asset. And we want the banks to be safe and sound.

We didn't create the reserves, you know, with that in mind, but, you know, since—in the post-crisis, you know, regulatory regime, we have brand-new and quite substantial liquidity requirements, which are very good and which have great public benefit. So it's not a bad thing that banks hold onto these reserves or another safe asset. We don't—we're not encouraging them to hold reserves instead of Treasuries. Treasuries or reserves are roughly equivalent for this purpose.

COURTENAY BROWN. Hi, Mr. Chairman. Courtenay Brown from Axios. A data-dependency question: Has there been a prioritization of market data over the economic data? How do you balance those two things?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. I would say that, you know, our mandate is maximum employment and stable prices, and that's about, you know, hard, real-side economic data. We—as I mentioned earlier, we—our tool, you know, our interest rate tool operates on the economy through financial conditions. So financial conditions matter, and they matter in the way that I suggested earlier—which is to say, broad financial conditions changing over a sustained period—that has implications for the macroeconomy. It does. So if you lower interest rates and they stay low, every borrower in the country ultimately has a lower interest rate. That'll have an effect on—over time, an effect on the economy. But, again, the entire focus we have is on maximum employment and stable prices, not on any particular financial market or financial conditions generally.

MYLES UDLAND. Chairman Powell, Myles Udland with Yahoo Finance. I would just ask, I guess, about the balance sheet in general. And are you surprised at how much of a conversation we're having around the balance sheet, and how much talk about the balance sheet from yourself and various Fed officials have moved financial markets? Because putting out a statement, clarifying your view on the balance sheet, you know, is somewhat surprising, considering it is restating, you know, what the Fed had said all along was the goal with balance sheet normalization—to roll it off, not have it be a key part of policy. And so I would just ask, are you surprised by how far that conversation has gotten just in the last six weeks?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. You know, I'll quickly go back—in 2017, we were—in designing the normalization plan, we were concerned at not having two active tools of policy.

We learned during the taper tantrum, frankly, in 2013 that was—that would be confusing to markets. So what we did was we set up the normalization of the balance sheet in a way that was very transparent so that you could look and know really, certainly as to Treasuries, pretty much the exact amounts and the timing in which we would be returning these assets to private hands. And we put that out there very publicly and in the hope that it would be priced in and understood, and that then we could put the balance sheet on the side and have interest rates be the active tool of policy.

So that went along that way very well, and I think that division of labor was a good one for our policy and for the benefit of the country. I think that there's—I think the market is now looking for more clarity around that, and I think we'll be providing it. That's what's happened. Thanks very much.

FEDERAL RESERVE press release

For release at 2 p.m. EST

January 30, 2019

Information received since the Federal Open Market Committee met in December indicates that the labor market has continued to strengthen and that economic activity has been rising at a solid rate. Job gains have been strong, on average, in recent months, and the unemployment rate has remained low. Household spending has continued to grow strongly, while growth of business fixed investment has moderated from its rapid pace earlier last year. On a 12-month basis, both overall inflation and inflation for items other than food and energy remain near 2 percent. Although market-based measures of inflation compensation have moved lower in recent months, survey-based measures of longer-term inflation expectations are little changed.

Consistent with its statutory mandate, the Committee seeks to foster maximum employment and price stability. In support of these goals, the Committee decided to maintain the target range for the federal funds rate at 2-1/4 to 2-1/2 percent. The Committee continues to view sustained expansion of economic activity, strong labor market conditions, and inflation near the Committee's symmetric 2 percent objective as the most likely outcomes. In light of global economic and financial developments and muted inflation pressures, the Committee will be patient as it determines what future adjustments to the target range for the federal funds rate may be appropriate to support these outcomes.

In determining the timing and size of future adjustments to the target range for the federal funds rate, the Committee will assess realized and expected economic conditions relative to its maximum employment objective and its symmetric 2 percent inflation objective. This assessment will take into account a wide range of information, including measures of labor market conditions, indicators of inflation pressures and inflation

Decisions Regarding Monetary Policy Implementation

The Federal Reserve has made the following decisions to implement the monetary policy stance announced by the Federal Open Market Committee in its statement on January 30, 2019:

- The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System voted unanimously to maintain the interest rate paid on required and excess reserve balances at 2.40 percent, effective January 31, 2019.
- As part of its policy decision, the Federal Open Market Committee voted to authorize and direct the Open Market Desk at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, until instructed otherwise, to execute transactions in the System Open Market Account in accordance with the following domestic policy directive:

“Effective January 31, 2019, the Federal Open Market Committee directs the Desk to undertake open market operations as necessary to maintain the federal funds rate in a target range of 2-1/4 to 2-1/2 percent, including overnight reverse repurchase operations (and reverse repurchase operations with maturities of more than one day when necessary to accommodate weekend, holiday, or similar trading conventions) at an offering rate of 2.25 percent, in amounts limited only by the value of Treasury securities held outright in the System Open Market Account that are available for such operations and by a per counterparty limit of $30 billion per day.

The Committee directs the Desk to continue rolling over at auction the amount of principal payments from the Federal Reserve’s holdings of Treasury securities maturing during each calendar month that exceeds $30 billion, and to continue reinvesting in agency mortgage-backed securities the amount of principal payments from the Federal Reserve’s holdings of agency debt and agency mortgage-backed securities received during each calendar month that exceeds $20 billion. Small deviations from these amounts for operational reasons are acceptable.

The Committee also directs the Desk to engage in dollar roll and coupon swap transactions as necessary to facilitate settlement of the Federal Reserve’s agency mortgage-backed securities transactions.”

- In a related action, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System voted unanimously to approve the establishment of the primary credit rate at the existing level of 3.00 percent.

Recent Economic Developments and Longer-Term Challenges

Remarks by

Jerome H. Powell

Chair

Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System

at the

Citizens Budget Commission 87th Annual Awards Dinner

New York, New York

February 28, 2019

It is a pleasure to speak here this evening at the 87th Awards Dinner. Tonight I will start with the near-term outlook for the U.S. economy. Then I will turn to a topic that is inspired by the Citizens Budget Commission’s mission statement, which focuses on the “well-being of future New Yorkers.” I imagine that future New Yorkers attending this dinner in 50 years may not look back on the near-term outlook in February 2018 as very interesting or important. So, tonight, after a brief review of the here and now, I will focus on an issue that is likely to be of more lasting importance: the need for policies that will support and encourage participation in the labor force, promote longer-term growth in our rapidly evolving economy, and spread the benefits of prosperity as widely as possible.

The State of the Economy and Near-Term Prospects

Beginning with the here and now, Congress has charged the Federal Reserve with achieving maximum employment and stable prices, two objectives that together are called the dual mandate. I am pleased to say that, judged against these goals, the economy is in a good place. The current economic expansion has been under way for almost 10 years. This long period of growth has pushed the unemployment rate down near historic lows (figure 1). The employment gains have been broad based across all racial and ethnic groups and all levels of educational attainment as well as among the disabled (figure 2).¹ And while the unemployment rate for African Americans and Hispanics remains above the rates for whites and Asians, the disparities have narrowed appreciably as the economic expansion has continued.

¹ The unemployment rate of those with a disability and between the ages of 16 and 64 fell from more than 16 percent in 2011 to less than 9 percent in 2018. Meanwhile, their labor force participation rate has been rising over the past few years. In 2018, about 8 percent of the population aged 16 to 64 reported themselves as having a disability, and their labor force participation rate was 33 percent.

Nearly all job market indicators are better than a few years ago, and many are at their most favorable levels in decades. After lagging earlier in the expansion, wages and overall compensation--pay plus benefits--are now growing faster than a few years ago (figure 3). It is especially encouraging that the labor force participation rate of people in their prime working years, ages 25 to 54, has been rising for the past three years. More plentiful jobs and rising wages are drawing more people into the workforce and encouraging others who might have left to stay.

In addition, business-sector productivity growth, which had been disappointing during the expansion, moved up in the first three quarters of 2018. Rising productivity allows wages to increase without adding to inflation pressures. Sustained productivity growth is a necessary ingredient for longer-run improvements in living standards.

The price stability side of our mandate is also in a good place. After remaining below our target for several years, inflation by our preferred measure averaged roughly 2 percent last year (figure 4). Inflation has softened a bit since then, largely reflecting the recent drop in oil prices. Futures markets and other indicators suggest that oil prices are unlikely to fall further, and if this proves correct, oil's drag on overall inflation will subside. Consistent with that view, core inflation, which excludes volatile food and energy prices and often provides a better signal of where inflation is heading, is currently running just a touch below our 2 percent objective. Signs of upward pressure on inflation appear muted despite the strong labor market.

While the data I have discussed so far give a favorable picture of the economy, it is also important to acknowledge that not everyone has shared in the benefits of the expansion to the same extent, and that too many households still struggle to make ends meet.² In addition, over the past few months we have seen some crosscurrents and conflicting signals about the near-term outlook. For instance, growth has slowed in some major economies, particularly China and Europe. Uncertainty is elevated around some unresolved government policy issues, including Brexit and ongoing trade negotiations. And financial conditions have tightened since last fall. While most of the incoming domestic economic data have been solid, some surveys of business and consumer sentiment have moved lower. Unexpectedly weak retail sales data for December also give reason for caution.

Given the positive outlook but also muted inflation pressures and the crosscurrents I just mentioned, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) will be patient as we determine what future adjustments to the target range for the federal funds rate may be appropriate to support our dual-mandate objectives. This common-sense risk-management approach has served the Committee well in the past.

I will turn now from the near-term outlook to the question of how the economy will perform over the long haul.

Longer-Term Challenges and Opportunities

From 1991 through 2007, the economy expanded annually at about 3 percent, similar to the pace for much of second half of the 20th century. Since 2007, however, growth has averaged just 1.6 percent. If the earlier 3 percent growth had persisted over the past 12 years, incomes today would be almost 20 percent higher than they now are.

² For example, a Federal Reserve survey indicates that in early 2018, after nearly a decade of growth, as many as 40 percent of households were unprepared for an emergency expense of as little as $400. Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (2018), Report on the Economic Well-Being of U.S. Households (Washington: Board of Governors, May), available at <https://www.federalreserve.gov/newsevents/pressreleases/other20180522a.htm>.

From the standpoint of future Americans, if the slower growth persists for a half-century, incomes will end up roughly half of what they would have been.

Why has growth slowed, and what can we do about it? To understand the causes of the slowdown, it is useful to divide growth into two components: (1) growth in the cumulative number of hours of worked by all workers and (2) growth in the amount of output derived, on average, from each hour of work. We refer to output per hour of work as “labor productivity.” From 1991 through 2007, when the economy expanded at a 3 percent average rate, hours worked increased about 1 percent a year and economy-wide productivity grew about 2 percent (figure 5).³ Since 2007, both of these growth factors have slowed by about half, with hours worked annually increasing only 0.5 percent from 2008 to 2018 and productivity rising just 1 percent on average.⁴

Growth in hours worked has slowed, in part, because of slower U.S. population growth. Birth rates have edged down, and immigration has slowed. Not only is the total population growing more slowly, but the share of the population in their prime working years is falling steadily as the very large baby-boom generation is moving into retirement. Demographic factors are generally slow moving and predictable, and there is no surprise in the fact that slower population growth and the retirement of the baby boomers are now contributing to slower growth in the total amount of work performed in the economy.

There is another factor contributing to the slower growth in hours, however, and this factor is more surprising and more troubling. To be counted as “in the labor force,” a person must either be employed or have looked for work within the past four weeks. The share of people of working age who are actually in the labor force has fallen significantly since the late 1990s. This decline raises the important question of why have people of working age increasingly chosen not to work.

⁴ John G. Fernald, Robert E. Hall, James H. Stock, and Mark W. Watson (2017), “The Disappointing Recovery of Output after 2009,” NBER Working Paper No. 23543 (Washington: National Bureau of Economic Research, June), <https://www.nber.org/papers/w23543>.

The data suggest that there are both positive and more problematic forces at work. For example, among those aged 16 to 24, participation in the labor market has fallen from about 65 percent in the 1990s to 55 percent now (figure 6). But this drop in participation appears to reflect young people getting more education. The fraction of this age group who are neither in school nor in the labor force has held fairly constant at around 11 percent, and measures of school enrollment are up.⁵ Higher educational attainment is much more important in today's job market than in the past, and investing in education today has long-term benefits for both the student and for society.⁶ Statistics confirm that higher educational attainment is associated with higher labor force participation, lower unemployment, and higher wages.

Turning to those aged 25 to 54, the participation picture is more troubling. Among prime-age men, participation has been falling for more than 60 years, with the decline averaging about 1.5 percentage points per decade (figure 7). For women, participation rose over the second half of the 20th century until peaking in the late 1990s. Since then, women's participation has dropped just a bit.

⁵ It is also true that a smaller share of students are holding down a job while in school.

⁶ For example, see Maria E. Canon, Marianna Kudlyak, and Yang Liu (2015), "Youth Labor Force Participation Continues to Fall, but It Might Be for a Good Reason," Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, Regional Economist (St. Louis, Mo.: FRB St. Louis, January), <https://www.stlouisfed.org/publications/regional-economist/january-2015/youth-labor-force>.

To put these numbers in context, let's look at data from other advanced economies. Prime-age male participation has fallen some across most of these economies since 1995 (figure 8). But the decline in the United States has been much larger than most, and U.S. participation was below the middle of the pack at the outset. As a result, the United States now has the fourth lowest participation rate among 34 advanced economies. For women's participation, the details are different, but the bottom line is similar. In the mid-1990s, the United States ranked in the upper tier for prime-age women's participation, but since then participation by women has advanced rapidly in many countries while it has declined slightly in the United States. Now the United States is sixth lowest among these 34 countries.

Researchers have investigated numerous possible reasons for the decline in prime-age participation. Among men, the drop in participation is much sharper for those with only a high school education or less. The drop for women is also sharper for those who are high school educated. This pattern is consistent with the idea that a modern economy demands ever-higher skills, and that workers without those skills are being left behind (figure 9). But the international experience suggests that this outcome is not inevitable: The drop in participation among those with less education is much smaller in some comparable countries than in the United States.⁷

The research into labor force participation in the United States and across the world does not find a magic fix, but it does suggest a variety of policies that might better prepare people for the modern workforce as well as support and reward labor force participation.⁸ I should note that the Fed has neither the tools nor the mandate to directly address the forces that are holding back labor force participation. We can contribute by fostering a strong labor market, in accordance with our mandate. While it is not the Fed's role to advocate particular labor force policies, I do want to put a spotlight on this important issue. I strongly believe policies that bring prime-age workers into productive employment, particularly those who may have been left behind because of low skills or educational attainment, could bring great benefits both to those workers and to our economy.

The second factor accounting for the slowdown in GDP growth is the slower pace of labor productivity growth, or output per hour worked. When measured annually, labor productivity growth is volatile, but focusing on five-year averages, we can see that from 1975 through 2007, productivity growth averaged about 2 percent while fluctuating between about 1 and 4 percent (figure 10). Since then, growth seems to have settled at the low end of that historical range. Unlike the situation with labor force participation, the slowdown in productivity growth is also evident in most advanced economies, and the U.S. experience is roughly comparable to that of other countries.

There is an ongoing debate over the causes and implications of this global slowdown in productivity growth. Some argue that the rapid growth seen over much of the 20th century was historically anomalous, and that we are destined to return to the slower growth of centuries past. Others are more optimistic that strong growth can return.

⁸ Francesco Grigoli, Zsóka Kóczán, and Petia Topalova (2018), "Labor Force Participation in Advanced Economies: Drivers and Prospects," chapter 2 in International Monetary Fund, World Economic Outlook (Washington: IMF, April), pp. 1-58, <https://www.imf.org/~media/Files/Publications/WEO/2018/April/c2.ashx>.

Many have noted that during the current expansion, investment and capital accumulation have been lower than in previous expansions, so perhaps we just need to invest more. Unfortunately, it does not seem to be that simple. Standard reasoning holds that capital-per-worker drives productivity. While we have had slower capital accumulation of late, we have also had slower growth in labor supply--hours worked. Thus, capital per worker, according to some analysis, has continued to increase roughly at its pre-recession trend. In this view, the productivity problem is not simply one of inadequate investment.⁹

Researchers have proposed several reasons why, even if the quantity of investment has kept up, recent investment may be leading to smaller productivity advances than in the past. The more optimistic analysts argue that we may be in a productivity lull while businesses work to realize the full benefit of advances that are embedded in recent investment.¹⁰ Others suggest that productivity-advancing ideas are inherently harder to find and exploit than in the past, implying that slower productivity growth may be with us for the long haul.¹¹ This debate is unlikely to be resolved anytime soon. In the meantime, we should look for policies that will create an environment in which productivity can flourish.

⁹ See Fernald and others, “Disappointing Recovery,” in note 4.

¹¹ Bloom and others (2017) as well as Thompson and Spanuth (2018) discuss how it has become more costly to make technological advances. See Nicholas Bloom, Charles I. Jones, John Van Reenen, and Michael Webb (2017), “Are Ideas Getting Harder to Find?” available at <https://web.stanford.edu/~chadj/papers.html>; and Neil Thompson and Svenja Spanuth (2018), “The Decline of Computers As a General Purpose Technology: Why Deep Learning and the End of Moore’s Law Are Fragmenting Computing,” available at https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=3287769.

We need policies that support innovation and create a favorable environment for investment in both the skills of workers and the tools they have. Indeed, the recent tax reforms were designed in part to boost capital investment and thus productivity. Once again, my goal tonight is to highlight the importance of growth-enhancing policies. Because these policies are not the province of the Fed, I will not advocate for particular approaches. Instead, I will just observe that researchers and policy analysts have proposed many promising ideas that may be capable of attracting wide support. Policies that succeed in enhancing productivity growth would greatly benefit future generations of Americans.

Conclusion

To conclude, the United States is currently in the midst of one of the longest economic expansions in our history. Unemployment is low and inflation is close to our 2 percent objective. My colleagues and I on the FOMC are focused on using our monetary policy tools to sustain those favorable conditions.

Tonight I have also highlighted some longer-term challenges we face, including low labor force participation by prime-age workers and low productivity growth. By promoting macroeconomic stability, the Fed helps create a healthy environment for growth. But these longer-term issues require policies that are more in the province of elected representatives. The nation would benefit greatly from a search for policies with broad appeal that could promote labor force participation and higher productivity, with benefits shared broadly across the nation.

At the center of everything we do is a strong commitment to independent research and sharing its profitable discoveries with investors. This dedication to giving investors a trading advantage led to the creation of our proven Zacks Rank stock-rating system. Since 1988 it has more than doubled the S&P 500 with an average gain of +24.99% per year. These returns cover a period from January 1, 1988 through January 7, 2019. Zacks Rank stock-rating system returns are computed monthly based on the beginning of the month and end of the month Zacks Rank stock prices plus any dividends received during that particular month. A simple, equally-weighted average return of all Zacks Rank stocks is calculated to determine the monthly return. The monthly returns are then compounded to arrive at the annual return. Only Zacks Rank stocks included in Zacks hypothetical portfolios at the beginning of each month are included in the return calculations. Zacks Ranks stocks can, and often do, change throughout the month. Certain Zacks Rank stocks for which no month-end price was available, pricing information was not collected, or for certain other reasons have been excluded from these return calculations.

At the center of everything we do is a strong commitment to independent research and sharing its profitable discoveries with investors. This dedication to giving investors a trading advantage led to the creation of our proven Zacks Rank stock-rating system. Since 1988 it has more than doubled the S&P 500 with an average gain of +24.99% per year. These returns cover a period from January 1, 1988 through January 7, 2019. Zacks Rank stock-rating system returns are computed monthly based on the beginning of the month and end of the month Zacks Rank stock prices plus any dividends received during that particular month. A simple, equally-weighted average return of all Zacks Rank stocks is calculated to determine the monthly return. The monthly returns are then compounded to arrive at the annual return. Only Zacks Rank stocks included in Zacks hypothetical portfolios at the beginning of each month are included in the return calculations. Zacks Ranks stocks can, and often do, change throughout the month. Certain Zacks Rank stocks for which no month-end price was available, pricing information was not collected, or for certain other reasons have been excluded from these return calculations.

At the center of everything we do is a strong commitment to independent research and sharing its profitable discoveries with investors. This dedication to giving investors a trading advantage led to the creation of our proven Zacks Rank stock-rating system. Since 1988 it has more than doubled the S&P 500 with an average gain of +24.99% per year. These returns cover a period from January 1, 1988 through January 7, 2019. Zacks Rank stock-rating system returns are computed monthly based on the beginning of the month and end of the month Zacks Rank stock prices plus any dividends received during that particular month. A simple, equally-weighted average return of all Zacks Rank stocks is calculated to determine the monthly return. The monthly returns are then compounded to arrive at the annual return. Only Zacks Rank stocks included in Zacks hypothetical portfolios at the beginning of each month are included in the return calculations. Zacks Ranks stocks can, and often do, change throughout the month. Certain Zacks Rank stocks for which no month-end price was available, pricing information was not collected, or for certain other reasons have been excluded from these return calculations.

Company Summary

South Jersey Industries, Inc., an energy services holding company based in Folsom, NJ, delivers energy solutions to its customers through three primary subsidiaries. South Jersey Gas delivers safe, reliable, affordable natural gas and promotes energy efficiency to customers in southern New Jersey. SJI's non-utility businesses within South Jersey Energy Solutions promote efficiency, clean technology and renewable energy by providing customized wholesale commodity marketing and fuel management services; acquiring and marketing natural gas and electricity for retail customers; and developing, owning and operating on-site energy production facilities. SJI Midstream is also an SJI subsidiary and houses the company's interest in the PennEast Pipeline Project.

At the center of everything we do is a strong commitment to independent research and sharing its profitable discoveries with investors. This dedication to giving investors a trading advantage led to the creation of our proven Zacks Rank stock-rating system. Since 1988 it has more than doubled the S&P 500 with an average gain of +24.99% per year. These returns cover a period from January 1, 1988 through January 7, 2019. Zacks Rank stock-rating system returns are computed monthly based on the beginning of the month and end of the month Zacks Rank stock prices plus any dividends received during that particular month. A simple, equally-weighted average return of all Zacks Rank stocks is calculated to determine the monthly return. The monthly returns are then compounded to arrive at the annual return. Only Zacks Rank stocks included in Zacks hypothetical portfolios at the beginning of each month are included in the return calculations. Zacks Ranks stocks can, and often do, change throughout the month. Certain Zacks Rank stocks for which no month-end price was available, pricing information was not collected, or for certain other reasons have been excluded from these return calculations.

QUESTION No. 4

Referencing page 11 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 8-16, does monetary policy have a lagged effect on the economy? If not, please explain.

RESPONSE:

Yes, monetary policy tends to have a lagged effect on economic activity.

QUESTION No. 5

Referencing page 11 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 8-16. Please provide support references to all support relied on by Mr. Baudino (from financial analysts or other sources) for the proposition that the yield on long-term treasury bonds is forecasted to remain constant.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino did not put forward "the proposition that the yield on long-term treasury bonds is forecasted to remain constant". The statement contained in this question is not what Mr. Baudino testified to on page 11, lines 8-16 of his Direct Testimony. It is Mr. Baudino's position that current interest rates are the best indicators of investor expectations and that utility regulators should not raise ROEs based on forecasted long-term interest rates that may or may not occur.

QUESTION No. 6

Referencing page 17 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 29-33, please explain the basis for Mr. Baudino's claim that KAW is less risky than the proxy group where he testifies that 50 -58 percent of the proxy group uses a future test year and KAW also uses a future year.

RESPONSE:

The basis for this statement is that not all of the companies in the proxy groups use future test years. If all the companies in the proxy groups used future test years, then the groups would likely be comparable in risk to KAW, other things being equal. Mr. Baudino pointed out that with respect to the use of a future test year, KAW is "slightly less risky" than the Combined Utility Proxy Group ("CUPG").

QUESTION No. 7

Referencing page 18 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 1-13. Did Mr. Baudino conduct any analysis that compares the level of capital investments that were made in 2017-2018 to KAW's projected capital expenditures? If so, please provide the analysis including all supporting documentation and electronic copies of the analysis with working formulas. Please explain whether or not the amount of capital investment that was made would have an effect on the earned ROE, and, if so, the basis for, and calculation of, that effect.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino did not conduct a formal analysis, as implied by this question, but did review KAW's historical and projected capital expenditures while developing his analysis, testimony, and recommended ROE.

Objection. The following portion of the request is uncertain, ambiguous, or confusing, and it is unclear what information is being sought:

"Please explain whether or not the amount of capital investment that was made would have an effect on the earned ROE, and, if so, the basis for, and calculation of, that effect."

Notwithstanding this objection, as a general proposition, between rate cases the amount of capital investment could affect the actual earned ROE, as would the Company's ability to control and manage its expenses, growth in revenues, and so on. For purposes of this case, the Company's future test year enables the Company to seek inclusion of capital investments through June 30, 2020. To the extent KAW's infrastructure and capital spending through June 30, 2020 exceed the historical 2017 and 2018 spending amounts, that additional investment will be captured in this rate proceeding.

QUESTION No. 8

Referencing page 18 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 1-13. Please explain with specificity, the basis of Mr. Baudino's conclusion that the absence of QIP does not increase KAW's risk relative to the proxy group.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino explained his position regarding risk and the QIP with sufficient specificity on the cited page 18, lines 1-13. This position is further bolstered by Mr. Baudino's discussion of how the use of a future test year mitigates risk for KAW.

QUESTION No. 9

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at pages 30 line 18 through 31 line 20.

- a. Has Mr. Baudino conducted any analysis that determines the amount of investment risk that is described by Beta? If so, please provide the analysis including all supporting documentation and electronic copies of the analysis with working formulas.
- b. Has Mr. Baudino reviewed any studies that support his conclusion that estimating the return on the market is nearly impossible and that the limitations on this analysis affect the usefulness of market return estimates? If so, please provide all supporting research. If not, please explain if this is just Mr. Baudino's opinion or if it has been substantiated through analysis. If it has, please provide all such analysis including supporting workpapers.
- c. Considering the cases that Mr. Baudino has provided testimony in over the last five years, please indicate what index was relied on by Mr. Baudino in each proceeding to estimate the risk-free rate.
- d. Please provide the support for Mr. Baudino's statement on p. 31 that in the CAPM it is prudent to use a wide variety of data to estimate investor-required returns. Is it prudent to use a wide variety of data in all ROE estimation models or just the CAPM? What would be the expected result of any model if a wide variety of data is relied on? Is the range of results that comes from using a wide variety of assumptions a reason to invalidate the model, or just the assumptions used to specify the model? Please explain the response.
- e. Is it reasonable to expect that the analyst developing the ROE estimation model would carefully select the data that is used in the analysis in order to ensure that the results are reliable? If you disagree, please explain why?
- f. Please explain how the calculation of the DCF model would not vary considerably based on an analyst's choice of inputs such as the proxy group and growth rate selection.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

Richard Baudino / Counsel as to Objections

RESPONSE:

- a. Mr. Baudino did not perform such an analysis. This type of analysis is not required for use of the CAPM in regulatory proceedings, as Mr. Baudino accepted Value Line's betas for use in his version of the CAPM.
- b. The difficulty of accurately estimating the "market return" portion of the CAPM was described by Dr. Malkiel in the passage cited in footnote 19 of Mr. Baudino's Direct Testimony. On page 222, Dr. Malkiel wrote:

Second, as Professor Richard Roll of UCLA has argued, we must keep in mind that it is very difficult (indeed probably impossible) to measure beta with any degree of precision. The S&P 500 Index is not "the market". The Total Stock Market contains many thousands of additional stocks in the United States and thousands more in foreign countries. Moreover, the total market includes bonds, real estate, commodities, and assets of all sorts, including one of the most important assets any of us has - the human capital built up by education, work, and life experiences. Depending on exactly how you measure the "market", you can obtain very different beta values.

In Chapter 8, pages 189-190 of Principles of Corporate Finance, Eighth Edition, by Franklin Allen, Stewart C. Myers, and Richard A. Brealey, the authors wrote the following:

How about the market risk premium? As we pointed out in the last chapter, we can't measure $r_m - r_f$ with precision. From past evidence, it appears to be 7.6%, although many economists and financial managers would forecast a lower figure.

- c. In recent cases, Mr. Baudino has consistently used the six-month average of the 30-year Treasury Bond and the 5-year Treasury note to estimate the risk free rate of return. Mr. Baudino switched from his prior use of the 20-year Treasury bond in past cases, although this switch made little difference in the CAPM results. Please refer to the copies of testimony Mr. Baudino provided in response to Question 1 for specific information on the risk free rate used by Mr. Baudino.
- d. The statement referred to in part (d) was based on the difficulty of accurately measuring the market return portion of the CAPM. Refer to Mr. Baudino's response to part (b) for further support. Mr. Baudino used a reasonably wide variety of data in estimating the market return for his CAPM analyses, which included both forward-looking and historical market risk premium estimates.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

Richard Baudino / Counsel as to Objections

With respect to the following questions:

Is it prudent to use a wide variety of data in all ROE estimation models or just the CAPM?

Objection. This question is overly broad and unduly burdensome. Notwithstanding this objection, the prudence of using "a wide variety of data in all ROE estimate models" depends upon the ROE estimation models and the variety of data being used. Mr. Baudino cannot provide a more detailed response without knowing more about "the variety of data" used in the various models and the models to which that data would be applied.

What would be the expected result of any model if a wide variety of data is relied on?

Objection. This question is overly broad, vague, and unduly burdensome. Without more specificity, the request cannot be answered with clarity. Notwithstanding this objection, again, the answer would depend on the "wide variety of data" and the model to which that data is applied.

Is the range of results that comes from using a wide variety of assumptions a reason to invalidate the model, or just the assumptions used to specify the model?

See the response to the prior question.

- e. It is "reasonable to expect" that an ROE analyst would go through a careful selection process. However, this process may not necessarily lead to a reasonable result in every case. This is certainly the situation with the CAPM results presented by Ms. Bulkley, as described by Mr. Baudino in his Direct Testimony. Mr. Baudino described in detail beginning on page 38 why Ms. Bulkley's excessively high CAPM results should be rejected.
- f. Objection. The question as posed is highly speculative, vague, and overly broad and, as such, cannot be answered with clarity. Mr. Baudino is unable to speculate on "how the calculation of the DCF model would not vary considerably based on an analyst's choice of inputs such as the proxy group and growth rate selection" without additional information as to the choice of the companies in the group and the growth rates selected.

QUESTION No. 10

Referencing Page 32 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 1-7, please provide the data relied on from the Value Line Investment Analyzer to calculate the market return used in Exhibit RAB-7.

RESPONSE:

Refer to the spreadsheets and work papers provided in response to Question 3.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

QUESTION No. 11

Referencing Exhibits (RAB-6) and (RAB-7). Please explain why Mr. Baudino relied on earnings and book value growth rates to estimate the return on the market that is used in his CAPM analysis but relied on projected dividend and earnings growth rates in his DCF analysis.

RESPONSE:

One of the assumptions underlying the DCF model is that earnings, book value, and dividends grow together at the same rate over the long run. Mr. Baudino did not include dividend growth in the calculation because many of the Value Line companies do not pay dividends or have dividend growth projections. Thus, Mr. Baudino included forecasted earnings and book value growth.

QUESTION No. 12

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 32, lines 15-17. Did Mr. Baudino include negative growth rates in the median growth rate calculation used to estimate the market return in his CAPM analysis? If so, please explain how this is consistent with the Constant Growth DCF model that was used to calculate the market return.

No.

QUESTION No. 14

Referencing Page 33 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 13-20. Did Mr. Baudino consider the effects of other anomalous events on the long-term historical market return? Specifically has Mr. Baudino considered the effect of the negative return on the market that occurred in 2008 on the overall market return? If so, please explain how this negative return influenced the overall market return and risk premium. If not, please explain why it would be reasonable to assume that this event would be likely in the future but not the growth in P/E ratios that occurred from 1980-2001.

RESPONSE:

Regarding Mr. Baudino's testimony on page 33, lines 13-20, the data was taken from the study by Ibbotson and Chen and the adjusted historical market risk premium of 6.04% is based on their calculations and the number presented in the 2018 SBI Yearbook. Mr. Baudino did not perform any other analysis associated with this number.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

Richard Baudino

Referencing Page 33 of Mr. Baudino's testimony at lines 13-20.

- a. Does Mr. Baudino agree that the P/E ratios for the companies included in the Combined Utility Proxy Group are currently at historically high levels as shown in Figure 4 on page 20 of Ms. Bulkley's testimony?
- b. If yes, why is it appropriate to rely on the DCF estimates of companies with P/E ratios that are not expected to be sustained in near-term when it is not appropriate to include a period of high P/E ratios in Duff and Phelps's estimate of the historical market risk premium?
- c. Is it important to consider the impact that the current level of P/E ratios is having on the DCF results considering the cost of equity is being estimated for the future period when KAWC's rates will be in effect? If not, please explain.

RESPONSE:

- a. Yes.
- b. The question in part (b) does not accurately reflect Mr. Baudino's position on the DCF model or on his presentation of the Duff and Phelps adjusted market risk premium. With respect to the adjusted risk premium presented on page 33, lines 13 - 20, Mr. Baudino presented this as an alternative calculation of the historical risk premium analysis he presented in Exhibit ___(RAB-8). Mr. Baudino did not base his ROE recommendation on this number or opine on its appropriateness in the current economic environment. Regarding Ms. Bulkley's forecasted P/E ratios in her Table 4, the Commission should not adjust its allowed ROE for KAW upward based on forecasted P/E ratios that may or may not come to pass. The current stock prices that are driving current P/E ratios for the CUPG are the best measure of investor return requirements for the companies in that proxy group and they reflect the low interest rate environment in today's economy as well as the relative safety of the regulated water industry generally.
- c. Refer to the response to (b) above.

QUESTION No. 16

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 35, table 3 and lines 7-9. Please explain why Mr. Baudino believes that the average results are reasonable results in a DCF analysis that relies on the proxy companies but the average is not the appropriate measure of central tendency when calculating the growth rate over thousands of observations in the market return calculation performed by Mr. Baudino.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino explained why the average for Value Line's data set was not a good measure of central tendency on page 32, lines 10 - 20. In addition, Mr. Baudino considered the median results of his DCF analyses on page 35, Table 3, and based his ROE recommendation on the midpoint of the DCF range for the CUPG.

QUESTION No. 17

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 35, table 3. Does Mr. Baudino believe that the results of the CAPM using the historical market return are reasonable estimates of the cost of equity? Please explain the answer fully.

RESPONSE:

No. It is Mr. Baudino's opinion that the CAPM results using historical risk premiums are producing unreasonably low values at this time and does not recommend them in this proceeding.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

Richard Baudino

QUESTION No. 18

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 35, lines 7-8. Does Mr. Baudino believe that KAWC has average risk when compared to the combined utility proxy group? If so, please provide the analysis used to support Mr. Baudino's conclusion including all supporting documentation and electronic copies of the analysis with working formulas.

RESPONSE:

Yes, it is Mr. Baudino's opinion that KAW is reasonably comparable in risk to the CUPG. Please refer to the discussion and analysis in Mr. Baudino's Direct Testimony at: page 14, line 10 through page 18, line 13; page 23, line 13 through page 24, line 3; page 36, lines 6 through 16; page 36, line 19 through page 37, line 13.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

QUESTION No. 19

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 42, lines 11-12. Does Mr. Baudino disagree that it is appropriate to evaluate the relative risk of the proxy group versus the risk of the subject company in estimating the appropriate ROE? Please explain this answer fully.

RESPONSE:

As a general matter, the answer here is yes. Although it is difficult to assess whether the subject company has precisely the same risk as a proxy group of companies, the analyst should perform a review to determine whether the subject company is reasonably comparable in risk to the proxy group as a whole.

Mr. Baudino's Direct Testimony at page 42, lines 11-12, addressed the specific issue of revenue decoupling, a rate mechanism that KAW did not request be implemented in this proceeding. The lack of such a request should not be a basis for a higher allowed ROE for KAW. If KAW believed that the volatility of its revenues required a revenue decoupling or rate stabilization mechanism, then it could have requested one in this case. Neither KAW nor Ms. Bulkley provided any analysis that the Company's volumetric risk is a problem that requires mitigation through revenue decoupling or rate stabilization.

WITNESS/RESPONDENT RESPONSIBLE:

QUESTION No. 20

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 46, lines 1-10. Mr. Baudino states that investors' ability and willingness to pay for a stock is reflected in current prices. However, in the current proceeding, is the objective to estimate the cost of equity for KAWC as of the present or the future period when rates will be in effect? If it is the future period, is it Mr. Baudino's opinion that current stock prices will prevail when KAWC's rate will be in effect?

RESPONSE:

It is not Mr. Baudino's opinion that current stock prices will prevail when KAW's rates are in effect. It is Mr. Baudino's opinion that current stock prices are the best indicator we have of investor expectations and preferences with respect to the value of the common stock of the companies in the proxy groups. Current stock prices, therefore, are the values that should be used in estimating the DCF model in this proceeding. The resulting ROE from Mr. Baudino's analysis can then be applied to the cost of capital for the future test year and implemented for the period in which rates are in effect. We cannot accurately forecast stock prices that will prevail when rates become effective in this case, any more than we can accurately forecast the interest rates that will be in effect at that time.

QUESTION No. 21

Referencing page 47, lines 8-10 of Mr. Baudino's testimony. Please explain why Mr. Baudino believes that it is inappropriate to rely on projected interest rates in the CAPM.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino discussed why regulators should not rely on forecasted interest rates in Section II of his Direct Testimony. Specifically, please refer to pages 10 - 11 of Mr. Baudino's Direct Testimony. Further, Mr. Baudino clearly set forth further reasoning for not using forecasted interest rates on page 47, line 8 through page 48, line 15.

QUESTION No. 22

Referencing Mr. Baudino's testimony at page 49, line 7. Is Mr. Baudino aware of any estimates of the expected growth rate on the market that are published by analysts? If so, please provide all such estimates.

RESPONSE:

Mr. Baudino's Direct Testimony, page 49, lines 8 through 10, does not reference "the expected growth rate on the market." This section of Mr. Baudino's testimony refers to the excessively high market return estimate provided by Ms. Bulkley and compares her estimate of 15.19% to Mr. Baudino's market return estimates. Mr. Baudino provided forecasted earnings and book value growth estimates from Value Line's Statistical Summary. Mr. Baudino does not know the "market" to which this question refers since it is not specified or defined.

QUESTION No. 23

At page 23, commencing on line 13, Mr. Kollen states “[t]he APP incentive compensation is primarily based on financial performance metrics.”

- a. Does Mr. Kollen agree that there are no performance compensation payments made if adjusted earnings per share falls below 90% of target?
- b. If the financial metrics exceed 100% of target are customers asked to assume any payments made for the achievement of more than 100% of the financial metric?

RESPONSE:

- a. Yes.
- b. The Company requests recovery of the APP expense from customers based on achieving 100% of the target metrics.

QUESTION No. 24

At page 23, commencing on line 16, Mr. Kollen states that “[t]he APP incentive payments are weighted 50% on EPS and 50% on other factors.”

- a. Please state Mr. Kollen’s understanding of every “other factor” on which APP performance based pay is made.
- b. Please explain, with particularity Mr. Kollen’s understanding of how the non EPS measures are factored into the employee’s APP payment.

RESPONSE:

- a. The other factors are described in the APP itself. Those written factors speak for themselves.
- b. The applicability of the other factors is described in the APP itself. Those factors speak for themselves.

QUESTION No. 28

Has Mr. Kollen investigated employee compensation practices to know if incentive compensation is common in the utility industry? If, so please provide the particular investigations made and the results obtained. Provide all studies related to the above that are in Mr. Kollen's possession.

RESPONSE:

Objection. The request for Mr. Kollen to provide other utility compensation studies that he may have reviewed in other utility rate proceedings is unduly burdensome and not reasonably calculated to provide relevant information in this proceeding. Notwithstanding this objection, Mr. Kollen is aware that incentive compensation is common in the utility industry based on his review of numerous utility rate filings during his career.

Has Mr. Kollen investigated employee compensation practices to know if incentive compensation is common in business, generally? If so, please provide the particular investigations made and the results obtained. Provide all studies related to such compensation practices that are in Mr. Kollen's possession.

RESPONSE:

Objection. The request for Mr. Kollen to provide "business" compensation studies that he may have reviewed outside of rate proceedings is unduly burdensome and not reasonably calculated to provide relevant information in this rate proceeding. Notwithstanding this objection, Mr. Kollen is aware that incentive compensation is common in business, generally.

QUESTION No. 32

Beginning on page 5 of Exhibit LK-1, Mr. Kollen provides a list of testimony he has filed before various regulatory commissions,

- a. Has Mr. Kollen ever recommended recovery of incentive compensation expense for an investor owned utility or authority? If so, provide copies of the relevant testimony?
- b. Has Mr. Kollen ever recommended denial of recovery of incentive compensation expense for a utility that was rejected by a utility regulatory commission? If so, provide copies of his testimony and a reference to the relevant order.

RESPONSE:

- a. Generally, Mr. Kollen has recommended disallowances of incentive compensation expense when tied to measures of financial performance. To the best of his recollection, Mr. Kollen has not addressed or recommended disallowances of other incentive compensation expense, except in one or more jurisdictions where the Commission historically disallowed certain other incentive compensation expense.
- b. Mr. Kollen has not performed and does not have a comparison of his recommendations and those that were adopted by the regulator in each case in which he filed testimony. The testimonies and the orders in those proceedings are publicly available and can be researched by the Company.

QUESTION No. 34

What test does Mr. Kollen believe appropriate to measure the reasonableness of a utility's wage and salary expense?

RESPONSE:

The reasonableness of the compensation expense for ratemaking purposes depends on many factors, including the basis for the forecast, assuming a forecast test year; the allocation among capital, expense, and other; the components of the expense, including payroll (labor) expense, benefits expense, and incentive compensation expense; and the components of the incentive compensation expense.

QUESTION No. 41

Is the retention of well-trained, dedicated employees a benefit to the customers of a business?

RESPONSE:

Objection. The request neither provides a reference to testimony nor identifies a particular witness it is directed toward, and is otherwise overly broad in scope. Notwithstanding this objection, yes.

QUESTION No. 42

Does Mr. Kollen agree that the Company Long-Term Performance Plan ("LTTP") provides a mechanism that aids in the retention of employees by requiring continued employment in order for an employee to avail him or herself of the benefits of the LTTP? If not, why not?

RESPONSE:

Mr. Kollen understands that this is an objective of the LTTP. Mr. Kollen has not performed an analysis of whether the LTTP is effective in achieving this objective or whether that objective can be assessed in isolation from other factors that may influence employee's decisions.

QUESTION No. 43

On page 24, commencing on line 13, Mr. Kollen states “the achievement of the target metrics tied to financial performance benefits shareholders to the detriment of customers in rate proceedings such as this.” Please explain precisely how the achievement of financial target metrics operates to the detriment of KAWC customers. Be specific in tying the achievement of financial targets to customer detriments.

RESPONSE:

Refer to Mr. Kollen's testimony at 23-27.

QUESTION No. 50

Mr. Kollen testifies at page 26, line 11 to a belief that “[i]ncentive compensation incurred to incentivize AWWC financial performance also provides the Company’s executives, managers, and employees a direct incentive to seek greater and more frequent rate increases from customers...”

- a. Does Mr. Kollen agree that, notwithstanding the disallowance of the APP, KAWC employees, were still paid wages and salaries that included the APP?
- b. Prior to this rate filing, when was the Company’s last base rate filing?
- c. Does Mr. Kollen have any evidence that the Company’s rate filing schedule was based on the existence of the APP or other performance based compensation?

RESPONSE:

- a. Yes.
- b. Objection. That date is a matter of public record and already within the factual knowledge of the Company. Notwithstanding this objection, Mr. Kollen is aware that the last base rate filing was on January 29, 2016 in Case No. 2015-00418.
- c. Yes. The revenue requirement in the Company’s rate filing included APP expense, which was denied by the Commission.

QUESTION No. 51

At page 26, Mr. Kollen argues that “there is an inherent conflict between achieving lower rates for customers on the one hand and achieving greater financial performance for shareholders and greater incentive compensation for executives, managers, and other employees on the other hand.”

- a. Is Mr. Kollen aware of the Hope case? FPC v. Hope Nat. Gas Co., 320 U.S. 591 (1944).
- b. Does not the Hope case state that “[t]he rate-making process under the Act, i.e., the fixing of 'just and reasonable' rates, involves a balancing of the investor and the consumer interests.”

RESPONSE:

- a. Yes.
- b. Yes. Mr. Kollen agrees with that assessment.
