Flu season is coming, and it could be nasty one

John Bacon USA TODAY

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says about 8% of Americans are sickened by the flu each year and that thousands die from the flu and related illnesses.

The CDC doesn't like to forecast whether the coming season will be relatively harsh or not, but the agency says the impact will be lessened greatly if people get vaccinated – and soonest is best.

The season generally starts in October and peaks in February before winding down with spring.

"Now is the best time to get your flu shot," CDC press officer Scott Pauley said. "You want to get it before the season really starts."

In Australia, the flu season is winding down. Ogbonnaya Omenka, an associate professor and public health specialist at Butler University, says the number of confirmed flu cases there was the highest in history – more than 270,000, compared to almost 60,000 in 2018.

That may not bode well for the U.S.,

"It definitely is concerning because the U.S. flu season comes after Australia's," he said. He added that a U.S. child who tested positive for influenza died earlier this month.

Cameron Kaiser, public health officer in Riverside County, California, called the death of a 4-year-old boy from Perris a tragic reminder of how deadly influenza can be.

"We should never forget that the flu still kills," Kaiser said.

Not all providers have stocked the vaccine, however. There are many different flu viruses and they are constantly changing. The composition of U.S. flu vaccines is reviewed annually and updated to match the nasty flu viruses the nation is expected to see. Flu vaccines normally protect against three or four viruses.

The World Health Organization chose most of the components for Northern Hemisphere flu vaccines on

The CDC recommends that everyone 6 months and older get the flu vaccine. ORLANDO HEALTH ARNOLD PALMER HOSPITAL FOR CHILDREN

Feb. 21 but didn't finish the list until late March. Thus not all providers have the shots available quite yet.

"It's an estimation game," Pauley said. "What strains are most likely to hit? What are we seeing around the world? The goal is to get ahead of the curve. It can be tricky."

CDC recommends annual influenza vaccination for everyone 6 months and older. Not everyone agrees. Many parents are skeptical, some even believing the shots can cause the flu.

And Jennifer Margulis, science writer and co-author of "The Vaccine-Friendly Plan," says a flu vaccine every year may lessen the shot's value. She cites a Canadian study of the 2014-15 influenza season there. The study indicated that season's flu vaccines performed unusually poorly overall and that people who had not been vaccinated the previous year were most likely to benefit from the vaccine. Those who were vaccinated two years in a row did not fare as well, according to the study.

The flu is a contagious respiratory illness caused by influenza viruses. It can cause mild to severe illness. Serious outcomes of flu infection can result in hospitalization or death. Some people, such as older people, young children, and people with certain health conditions, are at high risk of serious flu complications.

STURGIS – The South Dakota Supreme Court will once again hear oral arguments in Buffalo Chip's quest to become a municipality, after a lower court ruled in February that the popular motorcycle rally campground near Sturgis must be dissolved as a town.

The Rapid City Journal reports that oral arguments are scheduled for Sept. 30. Attorneys for the state have argued that Buffalo Chip was improperly incorporated in 2015 because it had fewer than 100 legal residents or 30 voters, as was required by law at the time. The city of Sturgis has also opposed Buffalo Chip's incorporation for years.

Buffalo Chip officials have argued that the area had more than 30 voters.

Kent Hagg, an attorney representing the campground, said the case could come down to the difference between the words "and" and "or." He said the law in place in 2015 required municipalities to have at least 100 residents "or" 30 voters.

In 2016, the state Legislature changed the law to require municipalities to have at least 100 residents "and" 45 voters.

Hagg said about 53 voters listed the Buffalo Chip as their address of record in 2015. The campground fills with thousands of visitors during the Sturgis motorcycle rally, but has few, if any, year-round residents.

In February, Fourth Circuit Judge Gordon Swanson ruled that the town must be dissolved. The city has said in a statement that the judge's decision was based on common sense and plain language of the law. "It would not make sense for the Legislature to authorize the incorporation of a municipality with no residents."

eral said Carroll was charged at the state level with more than 160 sex crimes after a monthslong investigation. Court records showed those charges were dismissed when the U.S. Attorney's Office obtained the case.

A criminal complaint recounted that victims said they'd been contacted by someone online who threatened to release nude photos of them unless they sent more. Authorities traced the online activity to a camper where Carroll lived with his grandmother.

Carroll's attorney declined to comment.

Taps cut off for 2M in Zimbabwe capital

Farai Mutsaka ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARARE, Zimbabwe – Tempers flared Tuesday as more than 2 million residents of Zimbabwe's capital and surrounding towns found themselves without water after authorities shut down the main treatment plant, raising new fears about disease after a cholera outbreak.

Officials in Harare have struggled to raise foreign currency to import water treatment chemicals; about $2.7 million is needed per month. Meanwhile, water levels in polluted reservoirs are dropping because of drought.

For residents who have seen shortages of everything from medicines to bread to gasoline in recent months, the latest indignity brought weariness and disgust.

"The toilets at school are just too filthy; people continue using them, yet there is no water," said 12-year-old Dylan Kaitano, who was among many uniformed schoolchildren waiting in line at wells, some shoving in impatience. "I didn't go to school today because I have to be here."

Everyone living in Harare is affected,

City Council spokesman Michael Chideme said, as residents turned to other options such as bottled water. He called it a dangerous situation because of the risk of water-borne diseases.

"It is a desperate situation," Deputy Mayor Enock Mupamaonde said outside the closed treatment plant.

At the Chivero reservoir, the city's main water supply, plastic bottles, vehicle tires and algae floated in the shallow water, which emitted a foul smell.

Zimbabwe's capital now frequently records cases of diseases such as typhoid due to water shortages and dilapidated sewer infrastructure. Some residents for months have been forced to get water from shallow, unsafe wells and defecate in the open.

"We are suffering," said Gladys Mupemhi, a resident of the low-income Kuwadzana suburb, who said some people woke up at 4 a.m. on Tuesday to wait for hours in line. "We are only allowed a maximum of 20 liters of water per person."

Twenty-six people died last year in a cholera outbreak, leading President Emmerson Mnangagwa to express dismay that Zimbabweans were suffering from a "medieval" disease.

High school seniors planning to attend college or technical school next fall should fill out the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, also called the FAFSA, as soon as possible beginning Oct. 1, according to the Kentucky Higher Education Assistance Authority (KHEAA).

The information on the FAFSA determines if students qualify for federal grants and student loans. It is also required to apply for state grants and scholarships. In addition, many colleges use the information to award their own grants and scholarships.

The FAFSA asks for information about income, assets and expenses. A formula set by Congress determines eligibility for federal and state aid. If the student is considered a dependent under federal guidelines, both the student and parents must provide financial information. Nearly all students going directly to college from high school are considered dependent. Some student aid programs have limited money and provide funds on a first-come, first-served basis, so it is important to submit the FAFSA as soon as possible.

Even if they don't think they'll qualify for financial aid, students should submit the FAF-SA. They may be surprised because student aid rules change all the
