Caney Valley News

By Tracey Hutton

July 10 - Hello again from Caney Valley!

"This Little Light of Mine, I Am going to let it Shine."

A neighborly hello to Janice and Lanny Vance. They are literally our neighbors across the creek from us and they reside on Vance Fork. Janice is able to work wonders with my hair.

Lanny has known Boone and I for several decades. It is a blessing to know them. Janice is such a wonderful witness for the Lord. It truly warms my heart and spirit when I go and have her cut and style my hair. Our conversation is usually about the Lord. She has inspiration gospel music that lifts your spirit in worshipping Jesus. It truly is a blessing to call them our friends and neighbors. It is a blessing to call her my sister in Christ. It is always good seeing you both. God Bless you.

I hope that our wonderful staff at Licking Valley Courier had a relaxing week off. They are very deserving of some time off. They are very diligent in providing our county with the latest updates. I, for one, am very grateful to Mr. Earl Kinner and his staff in producing a weekly paper for the many decades that it has went to print. Thank you.

As we gear up for another work week after celebrating our independence on July 4, there are many that are still grieving in the loss of a loved one. I have thought about the parents, especially lately, who have lost young children. It breaks my heart for their loss. There are no words that can give them the comfort that they are looking for. We can pray for their comfort, we can listen to them, and we can love them.

As I have thought about writing this article, I pray that Ben-Ben Brewer's family knows this is out of love and respect to him and to them. I asked his mother, Lindsay Adkins, her permission before publishing this and she said that would be fine. Healing sometimes comes through memories. This is to remind us that we are blessed for every moment that we live.

As I recall Bro. Harry Flannery's funeral message for little Ben-Ben Brewer, he presented the plan of salvation that even a child could understand. He understood their pain, but he gave them assurance of knowing that they would see Ben-Ben again if they gave their heart to Jesus. As little Ben-Ben was lying in state, in his casket, his little soul had gone on to be with Jesus. That is the assurance that Ben-Ben's family can build upon. I know that it is difficult still.

I believe that a person at times to adjust to the loss of a loved one, one breath and one heartbeat at a time, but the pain is present daily. It is not to say that we have forgotten their memory, their laughter, their voice, however it does remind us of the fragility of life.

The Old hymn, "Precious Memories," as it states, "Precious Memories, unseen angels, sent from somewhere to my soul. How they linger ever near me, and the sacred past unfolds. Precious Memories how they linger, how they ever flood my soul. In the stillness of the midnight, precious sacred scenes unfold."

In Ecclesiastes 3:1-2, "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven. A time to be born, and a time to die, a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted."

In verse 6, "A time to weep, and a time to laugh, a time to mourn, and a time to dance." In the Word of God, we read these words and as we read them, we think, "I have all the time in the world." We don't! We never know when our time will come, but it will come, whether we are young or old. We all have a time. I believe if little Ben-Ben Brewer, could say anything to anyone on this side of the grave, he would say, "Please love Jesus and give your heart to him so you can make Heaven your home."

Happy spiritual birthday to those who celebrated this week. Congratulations to the ones that shared their salvation experience: Michael Wagoner, Brenda Brown and Earl Ray Elam.

Happy birthday to those who celebrated this week.

Happy anniversary to those who celebrated this week.

Marriage congratulations are extended to Rachel Hutton

High Court's decision on coach's post-game prayer game-changer, education-law expert says

The Supreme Court's recent decision on a coach's post-game prayer is a game changer for public schools, says University of Dayton professor Charles J. Russo, an expert in education law.

The court has consistently ruled against school-sponsored prayer in public schools, and lower courts have mostly ruled that public-school employees can't openly pray at work even when students aren't involved. But on Monday the Supreme Court essentially affirmed employees' right to pray in the workplace. That could encourage more religious activities in public schools, Russo writes for The Conversation, a site for journalism by academic researchers.

In Kennedy v. Bremerton School District - the Supreme Court's first case directly addressing the question - the court ruled that a school board in Washington state violated a coach's rights by not renewing his contract after he ignored district officials' directive to stop kneeling in silent prayer on the field's 50-yard line after games. He claimed that the board violated his First Amendment rights to freedom of speech and freedom of religion, and the Supreme Court's majority agreed 6-3.

Coach Joe Kennedy said the board violated his rights to speak freely and to freely practice his religion. "The Ninth Circuit twice rejected these claims because it concluded that when he prayed, he did so as a public employee whose actions could have been viewed as having the board's approval," Russo writes. "Moreover, the Ninth Circuit agreed with the school board that the district had a compelling interest to avoid violating the establishment clause. During oral arguments at the Supreme Court, though, it was clear that the majority of justices were sympathetic to Kennedy's claims of religious discrimination and more concerned with his rights to religious freedom than the board's concern about violating the establishment clause."

The case is important "because the court has now decided that public school employees can pray when supervising students," and it "largely repudiates the three major tests the court has long applied in cases involving religion," leaving legal precedent in such cases unclear, Russo writes.

The ruling "also helps close out a Supreme Court term when the current justices' increasing interest in claims of religious discrimination was on full display, with another 'church-state' case decided in religious plaintiffs' favor just last week," Russo writes. "And on June 24, 2022, the court overturned Roe v. Wade. The debate over abortion is often framed in terms of religion, even though the court's holding focused on other constitutional grounds."

Though evangelical Christians call the case a win, Russo questions whether that's so. "The case brings to mind the saying to be careful what one wishes for, because one's wishes may be granted. By leaving the door open to more individual prayer in schools, the court may also open a proverbial can of worms. Will supporters who rallied behind a Christian coach be as open-minded if, or when, other groups whose values differ from their own wish to display their beliefs in public?"

and James Crisp, Rhonda and Donnie Phillips, Kallie and Derek Wright, and Michaela and Lucas Roberts.

Rachel is our daughter, and we are blessed to welcome James and his two sweet children, Kobe and Nevaeh, to our family. This family also has precious grandsons, Asher and Lincoln. God Bless your marriage and new life together. Bro. Mike Frisby performed this lovely ceremony and reminded me of the apostle Paul's writing in 1st Corinthians 13.

I have to say that as Rachel and her daddy, Boone Hutton, were dancing to Butterfly Kisses, I could see the love in their eyes for each other and remembering the many memories they have shared. The Father-Daughter bond is a special and precious bond. It was ten years ago, that he danced this Father-Daughter dance with his first born, Bridgett Craft, at her wedding. These girls are very blessed to have a wonderful
