Okay. Let me ask you one last question about the statute. This is subsection Oh, it's a little long, but bear with me. Local economic development requires an adequate supply of electricity to support new and expanding industries and is enhanced by robust employment in coal mining and coal transportation and that electric generation facilities.

11:28

11:33

11:40

11:46

the local job multiplier effect of employment in the coal, natural gas, and 11:52

electric uh generating industries and state and local taxes and other forms of economic value creation for the Commonwealth. Do you agree with that policy? Yes. Okay. What is the local job multiplier effect?

11:58

12:03

12:11

Um I assume what that means is for every job created there are additional induced

12:18

jobs that are or indirect jobs that are there to support those direct jobs in terms of services and local businesses and restaurants and things of that nature. Would that also include all the suppliers that located in Kentucky to serve Toyota? Yes. How many such suppliers are there that support Toyota? You have any idea? Uh hundreds at least. Uh I I know uh from my time at the cabinet, we used to talk about the number of Japanese businesses that exist in Kentucky. Uh and I know that there are 200 roughly uh Japanese companies that are primarily 12:57

12:25

12:32

12:39

12:46

12:51

suppliers to Georgetown. So I would say hundreds.

13:04

Thank you, Mr. Bevington.

Thank you.
