It should be a requirement that the PSC performs a cost of service study to verify LG&Es claims. The increase seem excessive by any measure, especially because it is set up as a flat fee rather than per usage. It is shameful that a flat fee would even be considered as an option because of the disproportional burden that will be placed on low-income households. If an increase really is necessary, it should be structured to encourage energy-efficiency by applying increases on a per usage basis,

Further, it is insane that LG&E is not supporting customer owned renewable energy. Not only is this strategy environmentally irresponsible, it is also short-sighted. Gradually adding a diversification of energy production sources helps to provide an energy supply that will:

- 1) more easily adapted to changing legislation that will eventually require more renewable energy
- 2) Provide more jobs related to renewable resources

3) Protects against the possibility of disruption of current fuel delivery and energy production systems that are in place.

It is the PSC's responsibility to consider a bigger picture and protect public interests, not to pander to private greed.
