I am writing in regards to LG&E's request to hike electric and gas rates.

I could not find a case number.

I believe LG&E's request to raise rates is not in good faith to consumers. Two factors come to mind.

1. While LGE likes to request price increases because they say they need them, they don't decrease prices after that. Some ten years ago after a wind storm and ice storm, LGE requested a price hike to pay for all the damage, however the price hike was never ended, so how long do we have to pay for LGE profits. 2. LGE requests the increase to pay for car charging stations. However consumers don't get anything from this deal. Consumers pay for the charging stations and then pay for the electric, LGE makes the profit. What do consumers get out of this? These are all just underhanded ways for LGE to make more money without paying for the investments themselves. Their profit already comes from the electric charge, and that should pay for the capital expenses. This is how every other company is required to work.

Thank you,
Sanjay Gangal
